CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 4, 1899.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE, a Senator from the State of Maine) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God, we come into Thy presence bowed and heavy in heart under a weight of sorrow which words can not express, for we miss the presence of our beloved and honored Vice-President, a man to whom the nation gave the second place of honor and dignity in the land, and who, by his manliness, his sweet and genial character and bearing, won for himself the affection and warm regard of all who were brought in contact with him, so that we who remain behind feel that we have had a personal loss of the highest and tenderest sort.

Bless, we beseech Thee, the broken-hearted wife and the son. Fulfill Thy promise to be the stay of the widow and the father of the fatherless. Grant Thy blessing unto all his friends and brethren, the members of the Senate. Keep us in Thy ways, and may we bear in mind the testimony of this man's life and character to the best, the highest, and the noblest things. We humbly ask, through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], who is not able to be present on account of personal illness, I present the credentials of the Hon. James P. Taliaferro as a duly elected Senator from the State of Florida. I ask that the credentials may be read and placed upon the files.

The credentials of James P. Taliaferro, chosen by the legislature of Florida a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1899, were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. PENROSE presented the credentials of Matthew S. Quay, appointed by the governor of Pennsylvania a Senator from that State; which were read, as follows:

In the name and by authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, executive department.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas a vacancy exists in the representation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in the Senate of the United States by reason of the expiration of the constitutional term of the Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay and the failure of the general assembly of the said Commonwealth to elect his successor:

Therefore, know ye, That reposing especial trust and confidence in the prudence, integrity, and ability of the Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay, I, William A. Stone, governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in conformity to the provisions of clause 2 of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, have appointed, and do by these presents commission, him a Senator to represent this State in the Senate of the United States, to supply the vacancy in the Senate of the United States occasioned by the expiration of the term of office of the Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay, which occurred on the 4th day of March last.

He is, therefore, to have and to hold the said office, together with all the rights, powers, and privileges thereunto belonging, or by law in anywise appertaining, until the next meeting of the legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified, if he shall so long behave himself well.

This appointment to compute from the day of the date hereof.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State at the city of Harrisburg, this 21st day of April, in the year of our Lord 1899, and of the Commonwealth the one hundred and twenty-third.

(SEAL.)

By the governor:

W. W. GRIEST,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection to that course. I submit a resolution which I ask may be referred at the same time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the credentials just read be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That Matthew S. Quay be admitted as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania in accordance with his appointment made on April 21, 1899, by the governor of said State.

Mr. BURROWS. There has been placed in my hands a memorial in the nature of a remonstrance against the seating of the appointee by the governor of the State of Pennsylvania, and I ask that it be received and referred also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be received and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present a remonstrance by 78 members of the legislature of Pennsylvania protesting against the seating of Hon. M. S. Quay as a Senator in this body. I move that the memorial be referred, with the credentials and other papers, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of Monroe L. Hayward, chosen by the legislature of Nebraska a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1899; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope that the usual and orderly method of procedure will now go on; that the Senators-elect whose credentials are undisputed will be admitted to take the oath, and that if any Senator presents himself about whom there is a question he will stand aside and the proper order be taken. My reason for insisting upon this course is that so many Senators as are clearly entitled to their seats ought to be permitted to take part in every vote which we may pass.

SWEARING IN OF SENATORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators-elect whose credentials have been received and are on file will present themselves in groups of four to take the required oath of office. The Secretary will call alphabetically the names of the newly elected Senators.

The Secretary read the names of—

Nelson W. Aldrich, of the State of Rhode Island.

William B. Bate, of the State of Tennessee.

Albert J. Beveridge, of the State of Indiana.

Julius C. Burrows, of the State of Michigan.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect (with the exception of Mr. Bate) came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Secretary read the names of—

Clarence D. Clark, of the State of Wyoming.

William A. Clark, of the State of Montana.

Francis M. Cockrell, of the State of Missouri.

Charles A. Culberson, of the State of Texas.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

John W. Daniel, of the State of Virginia.

Cushman K. Davis, of the State of Minnesota.

Chauncey M. Depew, of the State of New York.

Addison G. Foster, of the State of Washington.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Secretary read the names of—

Eugene Hale, of the State of Maine.

Marcus A. Hanna, of the State of Ohio.

Joseph R. Hawley, of the State of Connecticut.

Monroe L. Hayward, of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. THURSTON. I desire to announce that my colleague, Senator-elect Hayward, is confined at his residence by illness and can not be present to take the oath at this time.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect (with the exception of Mr. Hayward) came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Secretary read the names of—

John Kean, of the State of New Jersey.

Henry Cabot Lodge, of the State of Massachusetts.

Louis E. McComas, of the State of Maryland.

Porter J. McCumber, of the State of North Dakota.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

Hernando D. Money, of the State of Mississippi.

Redfield Proctor, of the State of Vermont.

Joseph V. Quarles, of the State of Wisconsin.

Nathan B. Scott, of the State of West Virginia.

William M. Stewart, of the State of Nevada.

James P. Taliaferro, of the State of Florida.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

Mr. McENERY. I wish to state that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is absent on account of severe illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators having responded to their names, there is a quorum of the Senate present.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Ordered, That the committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I present a memorial protesting against the validity of the election of WILLIAM A. CLARK, of Silver Bow County, on the 28th day of January, 1899, as a Senator from the State of Montana in the Senate of the United States for six years from the 4th day of March, 1899, for the reasons set forth in the protest or memorial. The memorial is signed by Henry C. Stiff, speaker of the house of representatives, and twenty-six members of the legislative assembly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator from Montana desire to have made of the memorial?

Mr. CARTER. I request that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if that course meets the view of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. I request that it be printed for the use of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order to print will be made.

Mr. CARTER. I also present a petition to the Senate, praying this honorable body at the earliest practicable moment to set a time and place for the hearing, before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of the protest herein set forth. The protest calls in question the right of Mr. CLARK to a seat in this body. The petition is signed by Robert B. Smith, governor; T. E. Collins, State treasurer; Henry C. Stiff, speaker of the house of representatives, Sixth legislative assembly of Montana; Thomas W. Poindexter, jr., State auditor; A. J. CAMPBELL, member of Congress; and Charles S. Hartman, ex-Representative in Congress from the State of Montana.

I request that the same disposition be made of the petition as of the memorial just presented by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

DEATH OF THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of GARRET A. HOBART, of New Jersey, Vice-President of the United States and presiding officer of this body, and to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with the deepest regret information of the death of GARRET AUGUSTUS HOBART, late Vice-President of the United States.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be suspended in order that the distinguished public services of the deceased and the virtues of his private character may be fittingly commemorated.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that the resolutions may lie on the table, to be called up by me at a convenient season in the near future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Vice-President, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 5, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 4, 1899.

This day, in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, the members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress assembled in their Hall and were called to order by Mr. ALEXANDER McDOWELL, the Clerk of the last House.

The CLERK. The House will now be in order.

Prayer will be offered by the Chaplain of the last House, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., Chaplain of the last House, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, both as individuals and as a nation, humbly and most reverently we bow before Thee, knowing full well that without Thee we can do nothing; but with Thee we are capable of the accomplishment of great things, and thus fulfill our individual destiny and make, to greater perfection, the genius of our Government.

We bless Thee for that providence which has upheld, sustained, and guided us through all the vicissitudes of the past, for the prosperity which now smiles upon us, for the intelligence, moral excellency, and religious attainments of our people, and for that prestige which under Thy providence has made us strong and influential throughout the world. We pray Thee that the onward march of progress may not be impeded by the new conditions which perforce have come upon us.

Make, we beseech Thee, for wisdom and righteousness our statesmen, that all the difficult and intricate problems which shall arise may be justly, wisely, and amicably adjusted.

To this end we most fervently pray for the President of these United States and all of his official advisers, that in the affairs of State he may be guided by the light of heaven.

Hear us when we commend to Thy special care the Congress now convened. Before it is an open page; and at its close we pray Thee that it may be writ with history which the American people may be proud to look upon and which shall meet Thy approbation. We pray that Thy Holy Spirit may come mightily upon the Speaker and upon all the members on this floor.

Since last we met many members who otherwise would be here have been removed by death. We lift up our hearts in behalf of their friends and their loved ones.

It would seem a great calamity that has been visited upon us in the death of our Vice-President. But Thou art God, and doeth all things well. May his character, unsullied, and his great example in private and in public life be an inspiration to us all, and may Thy loving arms be about his bereaved wife and child.

These things we ask in the spirit of our Lord, Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The CLERK. The hour, under the Constitution, for the convening of the Fifty-sixth Congress having arrived, the Clerk will call the roll by States to ascertain if a quorum of members be present. Members will answer to their names when called.

The roll was called, showing the presence of the following Members and Delegates:

The CLERK. Three hundred and forty-seven members have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The next business in order will be the election of a Speaker.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Clerk, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed by viva voce vote to the election of a Speaker to preside over its deliberations during the Fifty-sixth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

The CLERK. Nominations are now in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Clerk, I present the name of DAVID BREMNER HENDERSON, a Representative in Congress from the State of Iowa, for Speaker of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Clerk, I present the name of JAMES D. RICHARDSON, a Representative in Congress from the State of Tennessee, for Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Clerk, I present the name of JOHN C. BELL, a Representative in Congress from the State of Colorado, for Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Mr. Clerk, I present the name of FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, a Representative in Congress from the State of Nevada, for Speaker. [Applause.]

The CLERK. Are there any other nominations for Speaker? If not, the following tellers are appointed: Mr. MORRIS of Minnesota, Mr. UNDERWOOD of Alabama, Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, and Mr. CARMACK of Tennessee. They will please take their places at the desk.

The tellers took their places at the Clerk's desk.

The CLERK. The roll will now be called, and when members' names are called they will announce the name of the candidate for Speaker for whom they desire to vote.

The question was taken; and there were—for Mr. HENDERSON 181, for Mr. RICHARDSON 156, for Mr. BELL 4, for Mr. NEWLANDS 2, not voting 12; as follows:

For Mr. David B. Henderson of Iowa—181.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Clerk, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] is detained from attendance on the House on account of death in his family, and has requested me to make a pair with him. I voted for General HENDERSON and desire to withdraw my vote. I understand the gentleman from Georgia would have voted for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The CLERK. The request will be granted, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tally. For Speaker, Mr. HENDERSON received 177 votes; Mr. RICHARDSON, 153 votes; Mr. BELL, 4 votes; Mr. NEWLANDS, 2 votes. Mr. HENDERSON, having received a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress. [Loud applause.] I appoint as a committee to conduct the Speaker-elect to the chair Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Mr. BELL of Colorado, and Mr. NEWLANDS of Nevada. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, on appearing with the members designated, was greeted with loud general applause, which was renewed when he ascended to the chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Gentlemen of the House: The committee appointed to wait upon the Speaker and inform him of his election have discharged that duty. I take pleasure in presenting to the House of Representatives the Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON of Iowa, who has just been elected Speaker of the House. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: The voice of this House has called me to grave responsibilities. For that call I am most profoundly grateful, and I am keenly sensible of the weight of the responsibilities that attach to this great office. I am encouraged, however, by the thought that no member of this body can escape responsibility, both to his people and to his country. All of us are under bonds to do our best.

The approval of the country, the approval of one's own conscience, the attainment of great results, are not secured by petty contests on narrow fields, but must be sought and won on broad, patriotic lines of thought and action.

It is my duty, as it will be my aim and pleasure, to impartially administer the laws adopted for our government, but no Speaker can be successful unless he has the cooperation of the members of this House.

The generous partiality and kindness that have been shown to me by the entire membership here encourage me to believe that such imperfections as I may have will be modified by the consideration and supporting disposition of those constituting this great body.

I am ready to take the oath of office. [Loud applause.]

The CLERK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], longest in continuous service of this House, will administer the oath to the Speaker-elect.

The oath of office was administered to the Speaker by Mr. HARMER.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER then administered the oath of office to the Members and Delegates, the Members and Delegates presenting themselves as their names were called by States and Territories in the area in front of the Speaker's desk and taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. BROSIUS and Mr. BUTLER qualified by affirmation.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio (when the State of Utah was called), Mr. Speaker, I object to the swearing in of the Representative-elect from Utah and to his taking a seat in this body. I do so, Mr. Speaker, on my responsibility as a member of this House, and because specific, serious, and apparently well-grounded charges of ineligibility are made against him. A transcript of the proceedings of court in Utah evidences the fact that the claimant was in 1889 convicted, or that he pleaded guilty, of the crime of unlawful cohabitation. Affidavits and other papers in my possession indicate that ever since then he has been persistently guilty of the same crime, and that ever since then he has been and is now a polygamist. If this transcript and these affidavits and papers tell the truth, the member-elect from Utah is, in my judgment, ineligible to be a member of this House of Representatives both because of the statutory disqualification, created by the Edmunds law, and for higher and graver and quite as sound reasons. I ought also to say, in addition to what I have just said, that I have in my possession a certified copy of the court record under which the claimant to this seat was supposed to be naturalized, and that eminent counsel assert that if that be the record in the case there is grave doubt if the claimant is a citizen of the United States. I offer and express no opinion upon that proposition.

Mr. Speaker, if it were possible to emphasize the gravity of these charges and of the responsibility that is at this moment imposed upon this House, we will find that emphasis in the memorials, only a small part of which could be physically cared for in this Hall, but all of which I now present to the House, from over 7,000,000 American men and women, protesting against the entrance into this House of the Representative-elect from Utah.

Mr. Speaker, I yield a moment to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I also object to the gentleman from Utah being sworn in, and I adopt the facts the gentleman from Ohio has given. If these facts are true, the member ought not to be admitted. He is a polygamist, and his election is an assault upon the American home, an effort to degrade American womanhood and to destroy the sacred marriage system of one man to one woman. He has not only violated the laws of the United States, but also the fundamental compact made by his State with her Government. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that an opportunity will be given for a thorough and complete investigation. If the facts charged can be proved or established, there ought not to be a single member of this House who would vote to have him take his seat. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The House will observe order. The Chair will request the gentleman from Utah to step aside until the rest of the members are sworn in.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. In doing so, Mr. Speaker, I wish to have it understood that I waive no right in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can assure the gentleman that in stepping aside he will waive none of his rights.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is charged that Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas such charge is made through a member of this House, on his responsibility as such member and on the basis, as he asserts, of public records, affidavits, and papers evidencing such ineligibility:

Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of Brigham H. Roberts to be sworn in as a Representative from the State of Utah in the Fifty-sixth Congress, as well as of his final right to a seat therein as such Representative, be referred to a special committee of nine members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker; and until such committee shall report upon and the House decide such question and right the said Brigham H. Roberts shall not be sworn in or be permitted to occupy a seat in this House; and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath in relation to the subject-matter of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution which has been read.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I understood that there had been an agreement reached by which the consideration of this resolution would be postponed until after the reading of the President's message on to-morrow. If that is true, I have nothing to say at present.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I understood that such an understanding was to be arrived at at some such juncture as this, and I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the resolution be postponed until that time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Until after the reading of the message to-morrow?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Until after the reading of the message to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked to postpone the consideration of the resolution until after the reading of the President's message to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The oath of office was then administered to the remaining members.

ELECTION OF CLERK AND OTHER OFFICERS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of completing the organization of the House, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That Alexander McDowell, of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That Henry Casson, of the State of Wisconsin, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives;

That William J. Glenn, of the State of New York, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That Joseph C. McElroy, of the State of Ohio, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives; and

That Henry N. Couden, of the State of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "Resolved" and inserting the following:

That James A. Kerr, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That E. V. Brookshire, of the State of Indiana, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Henry H. Mohler, of the State of Illinois, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That George L. Browning, of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives; and

That E. B. Bagby, of the State of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to amend the resolution presented by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The original resolution offered by Mr. GROSVENOR was agreed to. The officers-elect mentioned in the resolution appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the United States that the House of Representatives has elected DAVID B. HENDERSON, a Representative from the State of Iowa, as Speaker, and ALEXANDER McDOWELL, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, as Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

MESSAGE TO THE SENATE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution, and ask its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that DAVID B. HENDERSON, a Representative from the State of Iowa, has been elected Speaker, and ALEXANDER McDOWELL, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, as Clerk, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I submit the resolution I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Speaker, on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following committee on the part of the House: Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. PAYNE of New York, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

THE RULES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad if that resolution could be modified so as to provide for the adoption of the rules for a given length of time. But to adopt them now permanently, and offering at the same time no opportunity for either discussion or amendment, I think is hardly customary, and certainly presents a very objectionable proposition.

As far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to discuss the rules as a whole. But there are two or three amendments which I think would be a manifest improvement on them, and I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he modify his resolution so as to provide for their adoption for a given length of time. This would be entirely acceptable to me, and I imagine to the whole House.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the rules referred to in the resolution have been operative for at least three Congresses, the Fifty-first, the Fifty-fourth, and the Fifty-fifth; and the operation of the rules is familiar to all gentlemen on both sides of the House.

Of course the rules on the whole are subject to amendment. From time to time it is the privilege of any gentleman, on either side of the House, to offer an amendment, which will go to the Committee on Rules and can be reported back, discussed, and, if acceptable to the House, adopted.

It seems to me, therefore, that under the circumstances—this side of the House being very desirous of proceeding to business—it would be well that we should adopt the resolution in its present form.

I ask the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment before doing that.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, only a few moments ago I was informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he intended to offer the resolution to adopt the rules which has just been presented by him and read at the desk. I stated to him that, so far as I was concerned, I would not agree to the adoption of the resolution, and in so far as I was authorized to speak for gentlemen on this side of the House, there would be no agreement to its adoption. I wish to emphasize what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has so well said with reference to the rules for the government of the House, and would be gratified if his suggestion for a vote upon the various amendments referred to, and of other amendments, should meet the approval of gentlemen on that side.

I know from what I have seen in the public press that it will be futile for us to make any objection to the adoption of the code of rules as presented, and as they have existed in the House for at least two Congresses. I had hoped, however, if I may be permitted to express it, that the very able and distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who now occupies his seat on the other side of the House, would bring forward his armies to take part in the contest against these rules. [Laughter.]

He knows quite well in such a conflict to reform the code of rules under which we have lived for two Congresses he would have the indorsement of every man upon this side of the House. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But if the reports in the papers are true, Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend has marched his army up the hill, and, following an illustrious precedent on another occasion, has marched them down again. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I understand that my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has withdrawn from the contest, and no longer offers objection to the adoption of the rules of the majority.

Now, I say, in view of this fact, and in view of the fact that that side of the House, being in the majority, has taken caucus action, as we are informed through the public press, and has pledged its party unitedly to force upon this House the rules as they now stand, it occurred to me that possibly, however desirous we might be, as stated by my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], to reform these rules, we would be unable to do so. Therefore, knowing that objection could not avail anything, I simply intended to protest on behalf of the minority and on my own account against the adoption of these rules—rules which have been so severe as to invite the open criticism of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and, I may say, of the intelligent men of this country everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I have made no agreement in respect to the adoption of the rules. The minority, if they see fit to do so, can vote against them, as I shall do; but I did not intend to make factious opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my friend from Pennsylvania will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], if he desires to be heard.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I do not want to exceed five or ten minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields, and the gentleman from Texas is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that an effort to prevent the adoption of substantially the code of rules that existed in the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-fourth Congresses would be futile; but I do believe that if this House were offered a fair opportunity to debate and to amend that code of rules, very great improvements could be made.

I feel certain that either the power of the Committee on Rules could be curtailed or the membership of that Committee could be enlarged. I remember that the first time I ever had the honor to address this House it was in opposition to the powers of the Committee on Rules in the Fifty-second Congress, and I predicted that the three members who constitute a majority of that Committee would in time become a legislative triumvirate. Under these rules the Committee on Rules not only decides what business the House must transact, but also what business the House shall not transact.

It is enough to clothe the Speaker with the power of recognition and to supplement that by adding the power to appoint the committees of the House; but to add to those powers, great almost to the point of being dangerous, the absolute control of the House through its Committee on Rules is giving greater power to the Speaker of this House than any one man in this free Republic ought to possess. To say that the power still remains with the House is a subterfuge, because the House can never pass upon a question until the Committee on Rules see fit to report. To say that the committee can be controlled by the majority is not candid, because that committee is considered the Speaker's official family and no gentleman of the Speaker's party would serve upon it unless he could support the Speaker's policy. If a Democrat were the Speaker of this House, and I could not cordially and loyally support his policy in that committee, I would resign my membership upon it.

I respect the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and no man on this side of the Chamber respects the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], now the honorable Speaker of this House, more than I do; and yet I divulge no secrets of the committee room when I say that with these gentlemen on it the Speaker of the Fifty-fifth Congress, with their help, absolutely controlled the Committee on Rules. I know that the Speaker of the Fifty-third and the Fifty-second Congresses—a great and splendid Democrat, whom we mourn even until this day—completely dominated the Committee on Rules when the House was Democratic. I know that the honorable Speaker of this House, under these rules, if they are adopted, will be practically the Committee on Rules; and the Committee on Rules is practically the House of Representatives. In view of that it does seem to me that if you will not curtail the power of that committee, certainly its membership ought to be enlarged.

But leaving aside this question, which may be considered partisan in its nature, there is another amendment that I believe gentlemen on both sides of this House would unite in adopting. For years I have been striving to devise a way whereby gentlemen with unobjectionable bills could secure the passage of them without having to run the gauntlet of unanimous consent; and I believe I have found an easy way. Under our rules as they stand now there is a morning hour devoted to the consideration of bills upon the House Calendar. A bill that appropriates a single dollar can not be considered in that hour, but one which involves a vital principle may be.

That, in my judgment, is a serious mistake. That rule ought to be amended so as to provide that the morning hour should be devoted to the consideration of bills that come with unanimous reports from committees of the House; and then, with the morning hour used as it would be used in a majority of the days, every member with an unobjectionable bill would be certain to secure its passage. Surely we could agree upon an amendment like that. Surely gentlemen will concede that a bill to pay a debt which is just and fair—so just and so fair that no member of the committee would resist its payment after an investigation—is a safer subject for consideration in this morning hour than a bill involving a great question, like the incorporation of the international bank.

I have seen some of the most important measures which have been presented for consideration to this House called up as a matter of right in this morning hour, while bills to repair some admitted injustice, or to pay some long-standing obligation of the Government, or to permit the construction of a bridge, must beg for unanimous consent. I have seen members obtain recognition from the Chair, and then some gentleman, under resentment of an objection against his own bill, would object and thus defeat the passage of a measure in which the people of a district might be deeply interested and which was absolutely free from all objection.

That is one amendment which I intended to propose to the code of rules; and I venture to assert that if we could obtain a fair vote upon it, that amendment, or something in the nature of it, would command a three-fourths vote of the body. I am not moved by any mere partisan opposition to the rules to resist the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. They are your method of transacting the public business. You adopt them, and you take the responsibility. But there are questions entirely outside of partisan questions in respect to which I believe the rules could be amended, and I believe the House ought to be offered an opportunity to amend them if it desires to do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely appropriate that I should thank the gentleman from Tennessee for the very kindly reference he made to myself. His candor and sincerity are so well known [laughter] that when he brings them both to bear with encomium the man who has received his compliment may feel that he has an indorsement of character. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure, even after the assurance given by the gentleman from Tennessee, that if an effort had been made from this side of the House to secure a serious modification of the rules that every man on that side of the House would have been a supporter of such a proposition. I have been discontented with the rules of this House for several Congresses. I have been trying to secure an amendment in several; and I remember that in the Fifty-third Congress, when I made an effort, as I did in the last—a Congress in which the Democracy had the majority and had placed a Speaker in the chair—that there was no man on that side of the House more bitter in criticism upon myself and my efforts for amendment than the distinguished and sincere and candid gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The gentleman ought not to have made the positive declaration that he did. His memory is too short for purposes of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, there are many of the rules of this House that do not meet my approval; but their adoption became a subject of party action—I will say to gentlemen if they want the whole truth—of caucus action; and the wisdom of the majority determined that the rules as they are were the better for the future government of the House; and with that modesty which always characterizes "the gentleman from Iowa" [laughter], when the majority of my own party so said, I yielded that implicit obedience that I hope I will always be able to yield. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question. Mr. RICHARDSON. Will not the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw that for a moment?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, for a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], but I want to say that his apology is accepted by me, and I hope by the House and the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I now renew my motion, Mr. Speaker, for the previous question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for ten minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not do that.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and, on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON), the Speaker announced that there were—ayes 174, noes 161.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for tellers.

Several MEMBERS. The yeas and nays!

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think we might as well take it by yeas and nays, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 178, nays 159, not voting 18; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. CHICKERING with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. BARTLETT.

For this day:

Mr. HAWLEY with Mr. McALEER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, do not the rules as now adopted fix that hour without the aid of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. They do not.

The resolution was adopted.

RESERVATION OF GALLERIES.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask for its immediate consideration. In view of the fact that there will be a great many in the galleries to-morrow, I offer this resolution providing for the issuance of tickets. I offer it at the request of the officers of the House.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the resolution will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the session of Tuesday, December 5, the galleries of the House, except the executive, diplomatic, and press galleries, shall be reserved under charge of the Doorkeeper, who shall issue two tickets to each member and mail the same to the members through the post-office of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Cox, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the President pro tempore had appointed as said committee Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

DRAWING FOR SEATS.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution I send to the desk, and ask its immediate adoption.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates of the present Congress, in pursuance of Rule II of the Fifty-sixth House, and when names of members absent from the city or on account of sickness are called that seats be selected for them by their colleagues.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution presented by the gentleman from Maine.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest in this connection—and I make the suggestion at the request of other members around me—that it would be a great convenience to all members if those who select their seats at the beginning of the drawing shall retain them until the close. This will prevent confusion and misapprehension in reference to seats which are or are not already occupied.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the rule be read upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.

1. At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], as ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, may be permitted to choose his seat before the drawing has begun.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I second the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. This will have to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have asked unanimous consent that this privilege be granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Is it not requisite that members shall vacate the seats in the Hall before the drawing begins?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask consent—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has been recognized.

Mr. BABCOCK. I rose for the purpose of requesting that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], the oldest member of the House in continuous service, be permitted to select his seat in advance of the drawing.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin. That was the request I was going to submit myself.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], the father of the House, be permitted to select his seat in advance of the drawing. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if any particular space is assigned or retained with the understanding that it is to be reserved exclusively for any particular party?

The SPEAKER. It has usually been understood that the Republican side of the House is on the left of the Chair.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The distinction, Mr. Speaker, is such that the usual methods can of course be applied. The Republicans have invariably occupied this side of the House. The custom has prevailed for years that the Republicans occupy this side and the Democrats the other side of the aisle.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULL. There are fourteen, I think, or perhaps more, of the Republican members of the House who can not be seated on this side, because of the limited seating capacity of the Hall. I assume, of course, that it will be the understanding, as heretofore, that we can take the last wedge of seats on the other side.

The SPEAKER. That has been customary. A member can select any seat in the Hall that he desires.

The drawing for seats will now begin, and the Clerk will proceed under the rule.

The drawing of seats began at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m. and was concluded at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.

During the drawing of seats the following occurred:

Mr. WEAVER (when his name was called). Mr. Speaker, I want to beg the pardon of the House. I understood that my number was called a long time ago, and my name as well, and therefore I chose a seat, to the detriment of some one else who, perhaps, would have preferred this seat. Therefore I will give up this seat, which I thought I had properly chosen at the proper time, and select another one, begging the pardon of the House for having occupied the seat as I have.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's frank admission, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to retain the seat that he now has.

The SPEAKER. You hear the request of the gentleman from New York. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk having completed the call,

The SPEAKER said: It appears that the names have all been called and the calls are exhausted. Is there any member who is not provided with a seat?

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah and Mr. WRIGHT rose.

The SPEAKER. There seem to be two gentlemen who have not secured seats. If there is no objection, these gentlemen will be allowed now to select any remaining seats. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOWARD, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. BARTLETT, indefinitely, on account of sickness of himself.

RESERVATION OF THE GALLERIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state for the information of the House that in the resolution concerning tickets of admission to the galleries for to-morrow it is provided that the tickets be mailed to members. The Doorkeeper advises me that the length of time necessary to get the tickets out will require that they probably be mailed late, and members might come here early in the morning and their tickets be delivered at their residences after they leave for the Capitol. It is therefore thought best, if it is agreeable to the House, that the tickets be put into the House post-office and held there, so that members may get them in the morning. If there is no objection, the resolution will be modified in accordance with this suggestion of the Doorkeeper. Is there objection?

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would be better to have the tickets delivered with our morning mail.

The SPEAKER. Well, you may lose them. They may pass you on your way to the Capitol. If there is no objection, the order will be made as suggested, and the tickets will be held in the House post-office.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Speaker admonish the doorkeepers to respect the authority of the House and to admit people to the galleries upon the tickets only. I know that this morning several members came here and could not get ladies admitted to the galleries upon their tickets, because the galleries were already overflowing without even standing room remaining. It follows with absolute necessity, therefore, that some doorkeeper somewhere must have violated the injunctions of the Speaker and the rules of the House and must have admitted people to the galleries without tickets.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Mississippi and the House that in some instances members have brought people here and forced them by the doorkeepers; but the doorkeepers have been instructed that no one is to be admitted without a ticket; and if any doorkeeper violates that instruction, he should be at once reported for proper treatment.

DEATH OF THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, to me has fallen the melancholy duty of announcing to the House that GARRET A. HOBART, Vice-President of the United States, departed this life, at his home in Paterson, N. J., on the 21st day of November, 1899.

The marked administration of the high office which he held, the second in the gift of the Republic, his brilliant and useful career, his sympathetic touch with every class, the unsullied purity of his public and private life, had so impressed the country that his death occasioned expression of deep-felt grief so universal as to manifest a general and profound sense of national bereavement.

Congress will doubtless, by concurrent action of the two Houses, at an early moment set apart a time for proper expression touching the life, character, and services of this eminent citizen.

I move you, sir, that this House, out of respect for his memory, do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves, out of respect to the memory of the late Vice-President of the United States, that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting a list of reports to be made to Congress by public officers, was taken from the Speaker's table and ordered to be printed.

Also, a bill (H. R. 80) to provide for the preservation of the timber in the Yosemite, General Grant, and Sequoia national parks, in the State of California, and for the restoration to the public domain of the timber lands within said parks—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 81) to provide for the further improvement of Green River, in the State of Kentucky—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 82) to provide for the improvement of Salt River, in the State of Kentucky—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 83) providing for widening and improving the road to the national cemetery in Marion County, Ky., and for the purchase of land to be used in connection with said cemetery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 84) authorizing and directing the construction of an addition to the United States Government building in the city of Augusta, Me.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 85) to amend section 4606 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 86) granting additional bounty to veteran volunteers—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 87) for the payment of bounty to veteran volunteers—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 88) to establish a United States court at Tishomingo, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 89) to provide for a macadamized approach and roadway to the national cemetery at Little Rock, Ark., and for a suitable wall or iron fence around said cemetery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 90) to provide that United States railroad corporations shall, for purposes of jurisdiction, be deemed citizens of the respective States into which their line of railway may extend—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 91) to regulate and discharge the payment of contracts in any money made legal tender by law for the payment of debts, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 92) to amend section 864 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to taking depositions de bene esse—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 93) in relation to cigarettes and to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 94) amending an act of January 29, 1887, relative to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 95) to amend section 22 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and amended March 2, 1889, and to permit common carriers to allow reduced rates to persons traveling on missions of mercy or charity, and to commercial travelers and other persons habitually traveling from point to point on any legitimate business—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: A bill (H. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

Mr. MARION BUTLER, a Senator from the State of North Carolina; Mr. HORACE CHILTON, a Senator from the State of Texas, and Mr. GEORGE W. MCBRIDE, a Senator from the State of Oregon, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. FAIRBANKS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that DAVID B. HENDERSON, a Representative from the State of Iowa, has been elected Speaker; that ALEXANDER McDOWELL, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, has been elected Clerk, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Also, that a committee of three had been appointed by the Speaker, on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of each of the two Houses had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. PAYNE of New York, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee had been appointed such committee on the part of the House.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, Mr. Bate, Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, is present and ready to take the oath of office. His credentials are already on file, and I ask that the oath be administered to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator-elect will present himself and take the required oath of office.

Mr. Bate was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. TURLEY; and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared at the bar, and

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to join with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives and inform the President that a quorum of each of the two Houses had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication that he might be pleased to make have performed that duty. The President replied that he would communicate at once with the two Houses in writing. He also expressed his satisfaction at the assembling of Congress and his hope that great good might result to the country from its deliberations.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

At 12 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m., Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

At the threshold of your deliberations you are called to mourn with your countrymen the death of Vice-President Hobart, who passed from this life on the morning of November 21st last. His great soul now rests in eternal peace. His private life was pure and elevated, while his public career was ever distinguished by large capacity, stainless integrity, and exalted motives. He has been removed from the high office which he honored and dignified, but his lofty character, his devotion to duty, his honesty of purpose, and noble virtues remain with us as a priceless legacy and example.

The Fifty-sixth Congress convenes in its first regular session with the country in a condition of unusual prosperity, of universal good will among the people at home, and in relations of peace and friendship with every government of the world. Our foreign commerce has shown great increase in volume and value. The combined imports and exports for the year are the largest ever shown by a single year in all our history. Our exports for 1899 alone exceeded by more than a billion dollars our imports and exports combined in 1870. The imports per capita are 20 per cent less than in 1870, while the exports per capita are 58 per cent more than in 1870, showing the enlarged capacity of the United States to satisfy the wants of its own increasing population, as well as to contribute to those of the peoples of other nations.

Exports of agricultural products were $784,776,142. Of manufactured products we exported in value $339,592,146, being larger than any previous year. It is a noteworthy fact that the only years in all our history when the products of our manufactories sold abroad exceeded those bought abroad were 1898 and 1899.

Government receipts from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, including $11,798,314.14, part payment of the Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness, aggregated $610,982,004.35. Customs receipts were $206,128,481.75, and those from internal revenue $273,437,161.51.

For the fiscal year the expenditures were $700,093,564.02, leaving a deficit of $89,111,559.67.

The Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the receipts for the current fiscal year will aggregate $640,958,112, and upon the basis of present appropriations the expenditures will aggregate $600,958,112, leaving a surplus of $40,000,000.

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, the internal-revenue receipts were increased about $100,000,000.

The present gratifying strength of the Treasury is shown by the fact that on December 1, 1899, the available cash balance was $278,004,837.72, of which $239,744,905.36 was in gold coin and bullion. The conditions of confidence which prevail throughout the country have brought gold into more general use and customs receipts are now almost entirely paid in that coin.

The strong position of the Treasury with respect to cash on hand and the favorable showing made by the revenues have made it possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to take action under the provisions of section 3694, Revised Statutes, relating to the sinking fund. Receipts exceeded expenditures for the first five months of the current fiscal year by $13,413,389.91, and, as mentioned above, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that there will be a surplus of approximately $40,000,000 at the end of the year. Under such conditions it was deemed advisable and proper to resume compliance with the provisions of the sinking-fund law, which for eight years has not been done because of deficiencies in the revenues. The Treasury Department therefore offered to purchase during November $25,000,000 of the 5 per cent loan of 1904, or the 4 per cent funded loan of 1907, at the current market price. The amount offered and purchased during November was $18,408,600. The premium paid by the Government on such purchases was $2,263,521 and the net saving in interest was about $2,885,000. The success of this operation was sufficient to induce the Government to continue the offer to purchase bonds to and including the 23d day of December, instant, unless the remainder of the $25,000,000 called for should be presented in the meantime for redemption.

Increased activity in industry, with its welcome attendant—a larger employment for labor at higher wages—gives to the body of the people a larger power to absorb the circulating medium. It is further true that year by year, with larger areas of land under cultivation, the increasing volume of agricultural products, cotton, corn, and wheat, calls for a larger volume of money supply. This is especially noticeable at the crop-harvesting and crop-moving period.

In its earlier history the National Banking Act seemed to prove a reasonable avenue through which needful additions to the circulation could from time to time be made. Changing conditions have apparently rendered it now inoperative to that end. The high margin in bond securities required, resulting from large premiums which Government bonds command in the market, or the tax on note issues, or both operating together, appear to be the influences which impair its public utility.

The attention of Congress is respectfully invited to this important matter with the view of ascertaining whether or not such reasonable modifications can be made in the National Banking Act as will render its service in the particulars here referred to more responsive to the people's needs. I again urge that national banks be authorized to organize with a capital of $25,000.

I urgently recommend that to support the existing gold standard, and to maintain "the parity in value of the coins of the two metals (gold and silver) and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the market and in the payment of debts," the Secretary of the Treasury be given additional power and charged with the duty to sell United States bonds and to employ such other effective means as may be necessary to these ends. The authority should include the power to sell bonds on long and short time, as conditions may require, and should provide for a rate of interest lower than that fixed by the act of January 14, 1875. While there is now no commercial fright which withdraws gold from the Government, but, on the contrary, such widespread confidence that gold seeks the Treasury demanding paper money in exchange, yet the very situation points to the present as the most fitting time to make adequate provision to insure the continuance of the gold standard and of public confidence in the ability and purpose of the Government to meet all its obligations in the money which the civilized world recognizes as the best. The financial transactions of the Government are conducted upon a gold basis. We receive gold when we sell United States bonds and use gold for their payment. We are maintaining the parity of all the money issued or coined by authority of the Government. We are doing these things with the means at hand. Happily at the present time we are not compelled to resort to loans to supply gold. It has been done in the past, however, and may have to be done in the future. It behooves us, therefore, to provide at once the best means to meet the emergency when it arises, and the best means are those which are the most certain and economical. Those now authorized have the virtue neither of directness nor economy. We have already eliminated one of the causes of our financial plight and embarrassment during the years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896. Our receipts now equal our expenditures; deficient revenues no longer create alarm. Let us remove the only remaining cause by conferring the full and necessary power on the Secretary of the Treasury and impose upon him the duty to uphold the present gold standard and preserve the coins of the two metals on a parity with each other, which is the repeatedly declared policy of the United States.

In this connection I repeat my former recommendations that a portion of the gold holdings shall be placed in a trust fund from which greenbacks shall be redeemed upon presentation, but when once redeemed shall not thereafter be paid out except for gold.

The value of an American merchant marine to the extension of our commercial trade and the strengthening of our power upon the sea invites the immediate action of the Congress. Our national development will be one-sided and unsatisfactory so long as the remarkable growth of our inland industries remains unaccompanied by progress on the seas. There is no lack of constitutional authority for legislation which shall give to the country maritime strength commensurate with its industrial achievements and with its rank among the nations of the earth.

The past year has recorded exceptional activity in our shipyards, and the promises of continual prosperity in shipbuilding are abundant. Advanced legislation for the protection of our seamen has been enacted. Our coast trade, under regulations wisely framed at the beginning of the Government and since, shows results for the past fiscal year unequalled in our records or those of any other power. We shall fail to realize our opportunities, however, if we complacently regard only matters at home and blind ourselves to the necessity of securing our share in the valuable carrying trade of the world.

Last year American vessels transported a smaller share of our exports and imports than during any former year in all our history, and the measure of our dependence upon foreign shipping was painfully manifested to our people. Without any choice of our own, but from necessity, the Departments of the Government charged with military and naval operations in the East and West Indies had to obtain from foreign flags merchant vessels essential for those operations.

The other great nations have not hesitated to adopt the required means to develop their shipping as a factor in national defense and as one of the surest and speediest means of obtaining for their producers a share in foreign markets. Like vigilance and effort on our part can not fail to improve our situation, which is regarded with humiliation at home and with surprise abroad. Even the seeming sacrifices, which at the beginning may be involved, will be offset later by more than equivalent gains.

The expense is as nothing compared to the advantage to be achieved. The reestablishment of our merchant marine involves in a large measure our continued industrial progress and the extension of our commercial triumphs. I am satisfied the judgment of the country favors the policy of aid to our merchant marine, which will broaden our commerce and markets and up-build our sea-carrying capacity for the products of agriculture and manufacture; which, with the increase of our Navy, mean more work and wages to our countrymen, as well as a safeguard to American interests in every part of the world.

Combinations of capital organized into trusts to control the conditions of trade among our citizens, to stifle competition, limit production, and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people, are justly provoking public discussion, and should early claim the attention of the Congress.

The Industrial Commission, created by the act of the Congress of June 18, 1898, has been engaged in extended hearings upon the disputed questions involved in the subject of combinations in restraint of trade and competition. They have not yet completed their investigation of this subject, and the conclusions and recommendations at which they may arrive are undetermined.

The subject is one giving rise to many divergent views as to the nature and variety or cause and extent of the injuries to the public which may result from large combinations concentrating more or less numerous enterprises and establishments, which previously to the formation of the combination were carried on separately.

It is universally conceded that combinations which engross or control the market of any particular kind of merchandise or commodity necessary to the general community, by suppressing natural and ordinary competition, whereby prices are unduly enhanced to the general consumer, are obnoxious not only to the common law but also to the public welfare. There must be a remedy for the evils involved in such organizations. If the present law can be extended more certainly to control or check these monopolies or trusts, it should be done without delay. Whatever power the Congress possesses over this most important subject should be promptly ascertained and asserted.

President Harrison, in his Annual Message of December 3, 1889, says:

Earnest attention should be given by Congress to a consideration of the question how far the restraint of those combinations of capital commonly called "trusts" is matter of Federal jurisdiction. When organized, as they often are, to crush out all healthy competition and to monopolize the production or sale of an article of commerce and general necessity, they are dangerous conspiracies against the public good, and should be made the subject of prohibitory and even penal legislation.

An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies was passed by Congress on the 2d of July, 1890. The provisions of this statute are comprehensive and stringent. It declares every contract or combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in the restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, to be unlawful. It denominates as a criminal every person who makes any such contract or engages in any such combination or conspiracy, and provides a punishment by fine or imprisonment. It invests the several circuit courts of the United States with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act, and makes it the duty of the several United States district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. It further confers upon any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the act the power to sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the costs of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees. It will be perceived that the act is aimed at every kind of combination in the nature of a trust or monopoly in restraint of interstate or international commerce.

The prosecution by the United States of offenses under the act of 1890 has been frequently resorted to in the Federal courts, and notable efforts in the restraint of interstate commerce, such as the Trans-Missouri Freight Association and the Joint Traffic Association, have been successfully opposed and suppressed.

President Cleveland in his Annual Message of December 7, 1896—more than six years subsequent to the enactment of this law—after stating the evils of these trust combinations, says:

Though Congress has attempted to deal with this matter by legislation, the laws passed for that purpose thus far have proved ineffective, not because of any lack of disposition or attempt to enforce them, but simply because the laws themselves as interpreted by the courts do not reach the difficulty. If the insufficiencies of existing laws can be remedied by further legislation, it should be done. The fact must be recognized, however, that all Federal legislation on this subject may fall short of its purpose because of inherent obstacles, and also because of the complex character of our governmental system, which, while making the Federal authority supreme within its sphere, has carefully limited that sphere by metes and bounds which can not be transgressed. The decision of our highest court on this precise question renders it quite doubtful whether the evils of trusts and monopolies can be adequately treated through Federal action, unless they seek directly and purposely to include in their objects transportation or intercourse between States or between the United States and foreign countries.

It does not follow, however, that this is the limit of the remedy that may be applied. Even though it may be found that Federal authority is not broad enough to fully reach the case, there can be no doubt of the power of the several States to act effectively in the premises, and there should be no reason to doubt their willingness to judiciously exercise such power.

The State legislation to which President Cleveland looked for relief from the evils of trusts has failed to accomplish fully that object. This is probably due to a great extent to the fact that different States take different views as to the proper way to discriminate between evil and injurious combinations and those associations which are beneficial and necessary to the business prosperity of the country. The great diversity of treatment in different States arising from this cause and the intimate relations of all parts of the country to each other without regarding State lines in the conduct of business have made the enforcement of State laws difficult.

It is apparent that uniformity of legislation upon this subject in the several States is much to be desired. It is to be hoped that such uniformity founded in a wise and just discrimination between what is injurious and what is useful and necessary in business operations may be obtained and that means may be found for the Congress within the limitations of its constitutional power so to supplement an effective code of State legislation as to make a complete system of laws throughout the United States adequate to compel a general observance of the salutary rules to which I have referred.

The whole question is so important and far-reaching that I am sure no part of it will be lightly considered, but every phase of it will have the studied deliberation of the Congress, resulting in wise and judicious action.

A review of our relations with foreign States is presented with such recommendations as are deemed appropriate.

The long-pending boundary dispute between the Argentine Republic and Chile was settled in March last by the award of an arbitral commission, on which the United States minister at Buenos Ayres served as umpire.

Progress has been made toward the conclusion of a convention of extradition with the Argentine Republic. Having been advised and consented to by the United States Senate and ratified by Argentina, it only awaits the adjustment of some slight changes in the text before exchange.

In my last Annual Message I adverted to the claim of the Austro-Hungarian Government for indemnity for the killing of certain Austrian and Hungarian subjects by the authorities of the State of Pennsylvania, at Lattimer, while suppressing an unlawful tumult of miners, September 10, 1897. In view of the verdict of acquittal rendered by the court before which the sheriff and his deputies were tried for murder, and following the established doctrine that the Government may not be held accountable for injuries suffered by individuals at the hands of the public authorities while acting in the line of duty in suppressing disturbance of the public peace, this Government, after due consideration of the claim advanced by the Austro-Hungarian Government, was constrained to decline liability to indemnify the sufferers.

It is gratifying to be able to announce that the Belgian Government has mitigated the restrictions on the importation of cattle from the United States, to which I referred in my last Annual Message.

Having been invited by Belgium to participate in a congress, held at Brussels, to revise the provisions of the general act of July 2, 1890, for the repression of the African slave trade, to which the United States was a signatory party, this Government preferred not to be represented by a plenipotentiary, but reserved the right of accession to the result. Notable changes were made, those especially concerning this country being in the line of the increased restriction of the deleterious trade in spirituous liquors with the native tribes, which this Government has from the outset urgently advocated. The amended general act will be laid before the Senate, with a view to its advice and consent.

Early in the year the peace of Bolivia was disturbed by a successful insurrection. The United States minister remained at his post, attending to the American interests in that quarter, and using besides his good offices for the protection of the interests of British subjects in the absence of their national representative. On the establishment of the new Government our minister was directed to enter into relations therewith.

General Pando was elected President of Bolivia on October 23. Our representative has been instructed to use all permissible friendly endeavors to induce the Government of Bolivia to amend its marriage laws so as to give legal status to the non-Catholic and civil marriages of aliens within its jurisdiction, and strong hopes are entertained that the Bolivian law in this regard will be brought, as was that of Peru some years ago, into harmony with the general practice of modern states.

A convention of extradition with Brazil, signed May 14, 1897, has been ratified by the Brazilian Legislature.

During the past summer two national ships of the United States have visited Brazilian ports on a friendly mission and been cordially received. The voyage of the Wilmington up the Amazon River gave rise to a passing misunderstanding, owing to confusion in obtaining permission to visit the interior and make surveys in the general interest of navigation, but the incident found a ready adjustment in harmony with the close relations of amity which this Government has always sedulously sought to cultivate with the commonwealths of the Western Continent.

The claim growing out of the seizure of the American-owned newspaper The Panama Star and Herald by the authorities of Colombia has been settled, after a controversy of several years, by an agreement assessing at $30,000 the indemnity to be paid by the Colombian Government, in three installments of $10,000 each.

The good will of Colombia toward our country has been testified anew by the cordial extension of facilities to the Nicaraguan Canal Commission in their approaching investigation of the Panama Canal and other projected routes across the Isthmus of Darien.

Toward the end of October an insurrectionary disturbance developed in the Colombian Republic. This movement has thus far not attained any decisive result and is still in progress.

Discussion of the questions raised by the action of Denmark in imposing restrictions on the importation of American meats has continued without substantial result in our favor.

The neighboring island Republic of Santo Domingo has lately been the scene of revolution, following a long period of tranquillity. It began with the killing of President Heurieux in July last, and culminated in the relinquishment by the succeeding vice-president of the reins of government to the insurgents. The first act of the provisional government was the calling of a presidential and constituent election. Juan Isidro Jimenez, having been elected President, was inaugurated on the 14th of November. Relations have been entered into with the newly established Government.

The experimental association of Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador, under the title of the Greater Republic of Central America, when apparently on the threshold of a complete federal organization by the adoption of a constitution and the formation of a national legislature, was disrupted in the last days of November, 1898, by the withdrawal of Salvador. Thereupon Nicaragua and Honduras abandoned the joint compact, each resuming its former independent sovereignty. This was followed by the reception of Minister Merry by the Republics of Nicaragua and Salvador, while Minister Hunter in turn presented his credentials to the Government of Honduras, thus reverting to the old distribution of the diplomatic agencies of the United States in Central America for which our existing statutes provide. A Nicaraguan envoy has been accredited to the United States.

An insurrectionary movement, under General Reyes, broke out at Bluefields in February last, and for a time exercised actual control in the Mosquito Territory. The Detroit was promptly sent thither for the protection of American interests. After a few weeks the Reyes government renounced the conflict, giving place to the restored supremacy of Nicaragua. During the interregnum certain public dues accruing under Nicaraguan law were collected from American merchants by the authorities for the time being in effective administrative control. Upon the titular government regaining power a second payment of these dues was demanded. Controversy arose touching the validity of the original payment of the debt to the de facto regent of the territory. An arrangement was effected in April last by the United States minister and the foreign secretary of Nicaragua whereby the amounts of the duplicate payments were deposited with the British consul pending an adjustment of the matter by direct agreement between the Governments of the United States and Nicaragua. The controversy is still unsettled.

The contract of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua was declared forfeited by the Nicaraguan Government on the 10th of October, on the ground of nonfulfillment within the ten years' term stipulated in the contract. The Maritime Canal Company has lodged a protest against this action, alleging rights in the premises which appear worthy of consideration. This Government expects that Nicaragua will afford the protestants a full and fair hearing upon the merits of the case.

The Nicaragua Canal Commission, which had been engaged upon the work of examination and survey for a ship-canal route across Nicaragua, having completed its labors and made its report, was dissolved on May 31, and on June 10 a new commission, known as the Isthmian Canal Commission, was organized under the terms of the act approved March 3, 1899, for the purpose of examining the American Isthmus with a view to determining the most practicable and feasible route for a ship canal across that Isthmus, with its probable cost, and other essential details.

This Commission, under the presidency of Rear-Admiral John G. Walker, U. S. N. (retired), entered promptly upon the work intrusted to it, and is now carrying on examinations in Nicaragua along the route of the Panama Canal, and in Darien from the Atlantic, in the neighborhood of the Atrato River, to the Bay of Panama, on the Pacific side. Good progress has been made, but under the law a comprehensive and complete investigation is called for, which will require much labor and considerable time for its accomplishment. The work will be prosecuted as expeditiously as possible and a report made at the earliest practicable date.

The great importance of this work can not be too often or too strongly pressed upon the attention of the Congress. In my Message of a year ago I expressed my views of the necessity of a canal which would link the two great oceans, to which I again invite your consideration. The reasons then presented for early action are even stronger now.

A pleasing incident in the relations of this Government with that of Chile occurred in the generous assistance given to the war ship Newark when in distress in Chilean waters. Not alone in this way has the friendly disposition of Chile found expression. That country has acceded to the convention for the establishment of the Bureau of the American Republics, in which organization every independent State of the continent now shares.

The exchange of ratifications of a convention for the revival of the United States and Chilean Claims Commission and for the adjudication of claims heretofore presented but not determined during the life of the previous Commission has been delayed by reason of the necessity for fresh action by the Chilean Senate upon the amendments attached to the ratification of the treaty by the United States Senate. This formality is soon to be accomplished.

In view of disturbances in the populous provinces of northern China, where are many of our citizens, and of the imminence of disorder near the capital and toward the seaboard, a guard of marines was landed from the Boston and stationed during last winter in the legation compound at Peking. With the restoration of order this protection was withdrawn.

The interests of our citizens in that vast Empire have not been neglected during the past year. Adequate protection has been secured for our missionaries and some injuries to their property have been redressed.

American capital has sought and found various opportunities of competing to carry out the internal improvements which the Imperial Government is wisely encouraging, and to develop the natural resources of the Empire. Our trade with China has continued to grow, and our commercial rights under existing treaties have been everywhere maintained during the past year, as they will be in the future.

The extension of the area open to international foreign settlement at Shanghai and the opening of the ports at Nanking, Tsingtao (Kiao chao), and Ta-lien-wan to foreign trade and settlement will doubtless afford American enterprise additional facilities and new fields, of which it will not be slow to take advantage.

In my Message to Congress of December 5, 1898, I urged that the recommendation which had been made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 14th of June, 1898, for an appropriation for a commission to study the commercial and industrial conditions in the Chinese Empire and report as to the opportunities for, and obstacles to, the enlargements of markets in China for the raw products and manufactures of the United States, should receive at your hands the consideration which its importance and timeliness merited, but the Congress failed to take action.

I now renew this recommendation, as the importance of the subject has steadily grown since it was first submitted to you, and no time should be lost in studying for ourselves the resources of this great field for American trade and enterprise.

The death of President Faure in February last called forth those sincere expressions of sympathy which befit the relations of two Republics as closely allied by unbroken historic ties as are the United States and France.

Preparations for the representation of the industries, arts, and products of the United States at the World's Exposition to be held in Paris next year continue on an elaborate and comprehensive scale, thanks to the generous appropriation provided by Congress and to the friendly interest the French Government has shown in furthering a typical exhibit of American progress.

There has been allotted to the United States a considerable addition of space, which, while placing our country in the first rank among exhibitors, does not suffice to meet the increasingly urgent demands of our manufacturers. The efforts of the Commissioner-General are ably directed toward a strictly representative display of all that most characteristically marks American achievement in the inventive arts, and most adequately shows the excellence of our natural productions.

In this age of keen rivalry among nations for mastery in commerce, the doctrine of evolution and the rule of the survival of the fittest must be as inexorable in their operation as they are positive in the results they bring about. The place won in the struggle by an industrial people can only be held by unrelaxed endeavor and constant advance in achievement. The present extraordinary impetus in every line of American exportation and the astounding increase in the volume and value of our share in the world's markets may not be attributed to accidental conditions.

The reasons are not far to seek. They lie deep in our national character and find expression year by year in every branch of handicraft, in every new device whereby the materials we so abundantly produce are subdued to the artisan's will and made to yield the largest, most practical, and most beneficial return. The American exhibit at Paris should, and I am confident will, be an open volume, whose lessons of skillfully directed endeavor, unflinching energy, and consummate performance may be read by all on every page, thus spreading abroad a clearer knowledge of the worth of our productions and the justice of our claim to an important place in the marts of the world. To accomplish this by judicious selection, by recognition of paramount merit in whatever walk of trade or manufacture it may appear, and by orderly classification and attractive installation is the task of our Commission.

The United States Government building is approaching completion, and no effort will be spared to make it worthy, in beauty of architectural plan and in completeness of display, to represent our nation. It has been suggested that a permanent building of similar or appropriate design be erected on a convenient site, already given by the municipality, near the Exposition grounds, to serve in commemoration of the part taken by this country in this great enterprise, as an American National Institute, for our countrymen resorting to Paris for study.

I am informed by our Commissioner-General that we shall have in the American sections at Paris over 7,000 exhibitors, from every State in our country, a number ten times as great as those which were represented at Vienna in 1873, six times as many as those in Paris in 1878, and four times as many as those who exhibited in Paris in 1889. This statement does not include the exhibits from either Cuba, Porto Rico, or Hawaii, for which arrangements have been made.

A number of important international congresses on special topics affecting public interests are proposed to be held in Paris next summer in connection with the Exposition. Effort will be made to have the several technical branches of our administration efficiently represented at those conferences, each in its special line, and to procure the largest possible concourse of State representatives, particularly at the Congresses of Public Charity and of Medicine.

Our relations with Germany continue to be most cordial. The increasing intimacy of direct association has been marked during the year by the granting permission in April for the landing on our shores of a cable from Borkum Emden, on the North Sea, by way of the Azores, and also by the conclusion on September 2d of a Parcels Post Convention with the German Empire. In all that promises closer relations of intercourse and commerce and a better understanding between two races having so many traits in common, Germany can be assured of the most cordial cooperation of this Government and people. We may be rivals in many material paths, but our rivalry should be generous and open, ever aiming toward the attainment of larger results and the mutually beneficial advancement of each in the line of its especial adaptabilities.

The several governments of the Empire seem reluctant to admit the natural excellence of our food productions and to accept the evidence we constantly tender of the care with which their purity is guarded by rigid inspection from the farm, through the slaughterhouse and the packing establishments, to the port of shipment. Our system of control over exported food staples invites examination from any quarter and challenges respect by its efficient thoroughness.

It is to be hoped that in time the two Governments will act in common accord toward the realization of their common purpose to safeguard the public health and to insure the purity and wholesomeness of all food products imported by either country from the other. Were the Congress to authorize an invitation to Germany, in connection with the pending reciprocity negotiations, for the constitution of a joint commission of scientific experts and practical men of affairs to conduct a searching investigation of food production and exportation in both countries and report to their respective legislatures for the adoption of such remedial measures as they might recommend for either, the way might be opened for the desirable result indicated.

Efforts to obtain for American life insurance companies a full hearing as to their business operations in Prussia have, after several years of patient representation, happily succeeded, and one of the most important American companies has been granted a concession to continue business in that Kingdom.

I am also glad to announce that the German insurance companies have been readmitted by the superintendent of insurance to do business in the State of New York.

Subsequent to the exchange of our peace treaty with Spain Germany acquired the Caroline Islands by purchase, paying therefor $5,000,000. Assurances have been received from the German Government that the rights of American missionaries and traders there will be considerably observed.

In my last Annual Message I referred to the pending negotiations with Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada. By means of an executive agreement a Joint High Commission had been created for the purpose of adjusting all unsettled questions between the United States and Canada, embracing twelve subjects, among which were the questions of the fur seals, the fisheries of the coast and contiguous inland waters, the Alaskan boundary, the transit of merchandise in bond, the alien labor laws, mining rights, reciprocity in trade, revision of the agreement respecting naval vessels in the Great Lakes, a more complete marking of parts of the boundary, provision for the conveyance of criminals, and for wrecking and salvage.

Much progress had been made by the Commission toward the adjustment of many of these questions, when it became apparent that an irreconcilable difference of views was entertained respecting the delimitation of the Alaskan boundary. In the failure of an agreement as to the meaning of articles 3 and 4 of the treaty of 1825 between Russia and Great Britain, which defined the boundary between Alaska and Canada, the American Commissioners proposed that the subject of the boundary be laid aside and that the remaining questions of difference be proceeded with, some of which were so far advanced as to assure the probability of a settlement. This being declined by the British Commissioners, an adjournment was taken until the boundary should be adjusted by the two Governments. The subject has been receiving the careful attention which its importance demands, with the result that a modus vivendi for provisional demarcations in the region about the head of Lynn Canal has been agreed upon; and it is hoped that the negotiations now in progress between the two Governments will end in an agreement for the establishment and delimitation of a permanent boundary.

Apart from these questions growing out of our relationship with our northern neighbor, the most friendly disposition and ready agreement have marked the discussion of numerous matters arising in the vast and intimate intercourse of the United States with Great Britain.

This Government has maintained an attitude of neutrality in the unfortunate contest between Great Britain and the Boer States of Africa. We have remained faithful to the precept of avoiding entangling alliances as to affairs not of our direct concern. Had circumstances suggested that the parties to the quarrel would have welcomed any kindly expression of the hope of the American people that war might be averted, good offices would have been gladly tendered. The United States representative at Pretoria was early instructed to see that all neutral American interests be respected by the combatants. This has been an easy task in view of the positive declarations of both British and Boer authorities that the personal and property rights of our citizens should be observed.

Upon the withdrawal of the British agent from Pretoria the United States consul was authorized, upon the request of the British Government and with the assent of the South African and Orange Free State Governments, to exercise the customary good offices of a neutral for the care of British interests. In the discharge of this function I am happy to say that abundant opportunity has been afforded to show the impartiality of this Government toward both the combatants.

For the fourth time in the present decade question has arisen with the Government of Italy in regard to the lynching of Italian subjects. The latest of these deplorable events occurred at Tal-lulah, Louisiana, whereby five unfortunates of Italian origin were taken from jail and hanged.

The authorities of the State and a representative of the Italian Embassy having separately investigated the occurrence, with discrepant results, particularly as to the alleged citizenship of the victims, and it not appearing that the State had been able to discover and punish the violators of the law, an independent investigation has been set on foot, through the agency of the Department of State, and is still in progress. The result will enable the Executive to treat the question with the Government of Italy in a spirit of fairness and justice. A satisfactory solution will doubtless be reached.

The recurrence of these distressing manifestations of blind mob fury directed at dependents or natives of a foreign country suggests that the contingency has arisen for action by Congress in the direction of conferring upon the Federal courts jurisdiction in this class of international cases where the ultimate responsibility of the Federal Government may be involved. The suggestion is not new. In his Annual Message of December 9, 1891, my predecessor, President Harrison, said:

It would, I believe, be entirely competent for Congress to make offenses against the treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the Federal courts. This has not, however, been done, and the Federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene either for the protection of a foreign citizen or for the punishment of his slayers. It seems to me to follow, in this state of the law, that the officers of the State charged with police and judicial powers in such cases must, in the consideration of international questions growing out of such incidents, be regarded in such sense as Federal agents as to make this Government answerable for their acts in cases where it would be answerable if the United States had used its constitutional power to define and punish crimes against treaty rights.

A bill to provide for the punishment of violations of treaty rights of aliens was introduced in the Senate March 1, 1892, and reported favorably March 30. Having doubtless in view the language of that part of Article III of the treaty of February 26, 1871, between the United States and Italy, which stipulates that "The citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall receive, in the States and Territories of the other, most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or shall be granted to the natives, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the natives," the bill so introduced and reported provided that any act committed in any State or Territory of the United States in violation of the rights of a citizen or subject of a foreign country secured to such citizen or subject by treaty between the United States and such foreign country and constituting a crime under the laws of the State or Territory shall constitute a like crime against the United States and be cognizable in the Federal courts. No action was taken by Congress in the matter.

I earnestly recommend that the subject be taken up anew and acted upon during the present session. The necessity for some such provision abundantly appears. Precedent for constituting a Federal jurisdiction in criminal cases where aliens are sufferers is rationally deducible from the existing statute, which gives to the district and circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction of civil suits brought by aliens where the amount involved exceeds a certain sum. If such jealous solicitude be shown for alien rights in cases of merely civil and pecuniary import, how much greater should be the public duty to take cognizance of matters affecting the life and the rights of aliens under the settled principles of international law no less than under treaty stipulation, in cases of such transcendent wrongdoing as mob murder, especially when experience has shown that local justice is too often helpless to punish the offenders.

After many years of endeavor on the part of this Government to that end the Italian Government has consented to enter into negotiations for a naturalization convention, having for one of its objects the regulation of the status of Italians (except those of an age for active military service) who, having been naturalized in the United States, may revisit Italy. It is hoped that with the mutually conciliatory spirit displayed a successful conclusion will be reached.

The treaty of commerce and navigation between the United States and Japan on November 22, 1894, took effect in accordance with the terms of its XIXth Article on the 17th of July last, simultaneously with the enforcement of like treaties with the other powers, except France, whose convention did not go into operation until August 4th, the United States being, however, granted up to that date all the privileges and rights accorded to French citizens under the old French treaty. By this notable conventional reform Japan's position as a fully independent sovereign power is assured, control being gained of taxation, customs revenues, judicial administration, coasting trade, and all other domestic functions of government, and foreign extraterritorial rights being renounced.

Comprehensive codes of civil and criminal procedure according to western methods, public instruction, patents and copyrights, municipal administration, including jurisdiction over the former foreign settlements, customs tariffs and procedure, public health, and other administrative measures have been proclaimed. The working of the new system has given rise to no material complaints on the part of the American citizens or interests, a circumstance which attests the ripe consideration with which the change has been prepared.

Valuable assistance was rendered by the Japanese authorities to the United States transport ship Morgan City while stranded at Kobe. Permission has been granted to land and pasture army horses at Japanese ports of call on the way to the Philippine Islands. These kindly evidences of good will are highly appreciated.

The Japanese Government has shown a lively interest in the proposition of the Pacific Cable Company to add to its projected cable lines to Hawaii, Guam, and the Philippines a branch connection with the coast of Japan. It would be a gratifying consummation were the utility of the contemplated scheme enhanced by bringing Japan and the United States into direct telegraphic relation.

Without repeating the observations of my special Message of February 10, 1899, concerning the necessity of a cable to Manila, I respectfully invite attention to it.

I recommend that, in case the Congress should not take measures to bring about this result by direct action of the Government, the Postmaster-General be authorized to invite competitive bids for the establishment of a cable; the company making the best responsible bid to be awarded the contract; the successful company to give ample bonds to insure the completion of the work within a reasonable time.

The year has been marked by constant increase in the intimacy of our relations with Mexico and in the magnitude of mutually advantageous interchanges. This Government has omitted no opportunity to show its strong desire to develop and perpetuate the ties of cordiality now so long happily unbroken.

Following the termination on January 20, 1899, by Mexico of the convention of extradition of December 11, 1861, a new treaty more in accordance with the ascertained needs of both countries was signed February 22, 1899, and exchanged in the City of Mexico on the 22d of April last. Its operation thus far has been effective and satisfactory. A recent case has served to test the application of its IVth Article, which provides that neither party shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens, but that the executive authority of each shall have the power to deliver them up if in its discretion it be deemed proper to do so.

The extradition of Mrs. Mattie Rich, a citizen of the United States, charged with homicide committed in Mexico, was after mature consideration directed by me in the conviction that the ends of justice would be thereby subverted. Similar action, on appropriate occasion, by the Mexican Executive will not only tend to accomplish the desire of both Governments that grave crimes go not unpunished, but also to repress lawlessness along the border of the two countries. The new treaty stipulates that neither Government shall assume jurisdiction in the punishment of crimes committed exclusively within the territory of the other. This will obviate in future the embarrassing controversies which have heretofore arisen through Mexico's assertion of a claim to try and punish an American citizen for an offense committed within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The International Water Boundary Commission, organized by the convention of March 1, 1899, for the adjustment of questions affecting the Rio Grande frontier, has not yet completed its labors. A further extension of its term for one year, until December 24, 1899, was effected by a convention signed December 2, 1898, and exchanged and proclaimed in February last.

An invitation extended to the President of Mexico to visit Chicago in October, on the occasion of laying the corner stone of the United States Government building in that city, was cordially accepted by him, with the necessary consent of the Mexican Congress, but the illness of a member of his family prevented his attendance. The Minister of Foreign Relations, however, came as the personal representative of President Diaz, and in that high character was duly honored.

Claims growing out of the seizure of American sealing vessels in Bering Sea have been under discussion with the Government of Russia for several years, with the recent happy result of an agreement to submit them to the decision of a single arbitrator. By this act Russia affords proof of her adherence to the beneficent principle of arbitration which her plenipotentiaries conspicuously favored at The Hague Disarmament Conference when it was advocated by the representatives of the United States.

A suggestion for a permanent exposition of our products and manufactures in Russia, although not yet fully shaped, has been so cordially welcomed by the Imperial Government that it may not inaptly take a fitting place in whatever legislation the Congress may adopt looking to enlargement of our commercial opportunities abroad.

Important events have occurred in the Samoan Islands. The election, according to the laws and customs of Samoa, of a successor to the late King, Malietoa Laupepa, developed a contest as to the validity of the result, which issue, by the terms of the General Act, was to be decided by the Chief Justice. Upon his rendering a judgment in favor of Malietoa Tanu, the rival chief, Mataafa, took up arms. The active intervention of American and British war ships became imperative to restore order, at the cost of sanguinary encounters. In this emergency a joint commission of representatives of the United States, Germany, and Great Britain was sent to Samoa to investigate the situation and provide a temporary remedy. By its active efforts a peaceful solution was reached for the time being, the kingship being abolished and a provisional government established. Recommendations unanimously made by the commission for a permanent adjustment of the Samoan question were taken under consideration by the three powers parties to the General Act. But the more they were examined the more evident it became that a radical change was necessary in the relations of the powers to Samoa.

The inconveniences and possible perils of the tripartite scheme of supervision and control in the Samoan group by powers having little interest in common in that quarter beyond commercial rivalry had been once more emphasized by the recent events. The suggested remedy of the Joint Commission, like the scheme it aimed to replace, amounted to what has been styled a tridominium, being the exercise of the functions of sovereignty by an unanimous agreement of three powers. The situation had become far more intricate and embarrassing from every point of view than it was when my predecessor, in 1894, summed up its perplexities and condemned the participation in it of the United States.

The arrangement under which Samoa was administered had proved impracticable and unacceptable to all the powers concerned. To withdraw from the agreement and abandon the islands to Germany and Great Britain would not be compatible with our interests in the archipelago. To relinquish our rights in the harbor of Pago Pago, the best anchorage in the Pacific, the occupancy of which had been leased to the United States in 1878 by the first foreign treaty ever concluded by Samoa, was not to be thought of either as regards the needs of our Navy or the interests of our growing commerce with the East. We could not have considered any proposition for the abrogation of the tripartite control which did not confirm us in all our rights and safeguard all our national interests in the islands.

Our views commended themselves to the other powers. A satisfactory arrangement was concluded between the Governments of Germany and of England, by virtue of which England retired from Samoa in view of compensations in other directions, and both powers renounced in favor of the United States all their rights and claims over and in respect to that portion of the group lying to the east of the one hundred and seventy-first degree of west longitude, embracing the islands of Tutuila, Ofu, Olosega, and Manua. I transmit to the Senate, for its constitutional action thereon, a convention, which besides the provisions above mentioned also guarantees us the same privileges and conditions in respect to commerce and commercial vessels in all of the islands of Samoa as those possessed by Germany.

Claims have been preferred by white residents of Samoa on account of injuries alleged to have been suffered through the acts of the treaty Governments in putting down the late disturbances. A convention has been made between the three powers for the investigation and settlement of these claims by a neutral arbitrator, to which the attention of the Senate will be invited.

My Annual Message of last year was necessarily devoted in great part to a consideration of the Spanish war and of the results it wrought and the conditions it imposed for the future. I am gratified to announce that the treaty of peace has restored friendly relations between the two powers. Effect has been given to its most important provisions. The evacuation of Porto Rico having already been accomplished on the 18th of October, 1898, nothing remained necessary there but to continue the provisional military control of the island until the Congress should enact a suitable government for the ceded territory. Of the character and scope of the measures to that end I shall treat in another part of this Message.

The withdrawal of the authority of Spain from the island of Cuba was effected by the 1st of January, so that the full re-establishment of peace found the relinquished territory held by us in trust for the inhabitants, maintaining, under the direction of the Executive, such government and control therein as should conserve public order, restore the productive conditions of peace so long disturbed by the instability and disorder which prevailed for the greater part of the preceding three decades, and build up that tranquil development of the domestic state whereby alone can be realized the high purpose, as proclaimed in the joint resolution adopted by the Congress on the 19th of April, 1898, by which the United States disclaimed any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over Cuba, except for the pacification thereof, and asserted its determination when that was accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people. The pledge contained in this resolution is of the highest honorable obligation and must be sacredly kept.

I believe that substantial progress has been made in this direction. All the administrative measures adopted in Cuba have aimed to fit it for a regenerated existence by enforcing the supremacy of law and justice; by placing wherever practicable the machinery of administration in the hands of the inhabitants; by instituting needed sanitary reforms; by spreading education; by fostering industry and trade; by inculcating public morality, and, in short, by taking every rational step to aid the Cuban people to attain to that plane of self-conscious respect and self-reliant unity which fits an enlightened community for self-government within its own sphere, while enabling it to fulfill all outward obligations.

This nation has assumed before the world a grave responsibility for the future good government of Cuba. We have accepted a trust the fulfillment of which calls for the sternest integrity of purpose and the exercise of the highest wisdom. The new Cuba yet to arise from the ashes of the past must needs be bound to us by ties of singular intimacy and strength if its enduring welfare is to be assured. Whether those ties shall be organic or conventional, the destinies of Cuba are in some rightful form and manner irrevocably linked with our own, but how and how far is for the future to determine in the ripeness of events. Whatever be the outcome, we must see to it that free Cuba be a reality, not a name; a perfect entity, not a hasty experiment bearing within itself the elements of failure. Our mission, to accomplish which we took up the wager of battle, is not to be fulfilled by turning adrift any loosely framed commonwealth to face the vicissitudes which too often attend weaker states whose natural wealth and abundant resources are offset by the incongruities of their political organization and the recurring occasions for internal rivalries to sap their strength and dissipate their energies. The greatest blessing which can come to Cuba is the restoration of her agricultural and industrial prosperity, which will give employment to idle men and reestablish the pursuits of peace. This is her chief and immediate need.

On the 19th of August last an order was made for the taking of the census in the island, to be completed on the 30th of November. By the treaty of peace the Spanish people on the island have until April 11, 1900, to elect whether they will remain citizens of Spain or become citizens of Cuba. Until then it can not be definitely ascertained who shall be entitled to participate in the formation of the government of Cuba. By that time the results of the census will have been tabulated and we shall proceed to provide for elections which will commit the municipal governments of the island to the officers elected by the people. The experience thus acquired will prove of great value in the formation of a representative convention of the people to draft a constitution and establish a general system of independent government for the island. In the meantime and so long as we exercise control over the island the products of Cuba should have a market in the United States on as good terms and with as favorable rates of duty as are given to the West India Islands under treaties of reciprocity which shall be made.

For the relief of the distressed in the island of Cuba the War Department has issued supplies to destitute persons through the officers of the Army, which have amounted to 5,493,000 rations, at a cost of $1,417,554.07.

To promote the disarmament of the Cuban volunteer army, and in the interest of public peace and the welfare of the people, the sum of $75 was paid to each Cuban soldier borne upon the authenticated rolls, on condition that he should deposit his arms with the authorities designated by the United States. The sum thus disbursed aggregated $2,547,750, which was paid from the emergency fund provided by the act of January 5, 1899, for that purpose.

Out of the Cuban island revenues during the six months ending June 30, 1899, $1,712,014.20 was expended for sanitation, $293,881.70 for charities and hospitals, and $88,944.03 for aid to the destitute.

Following the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace the two Governments accredited ministers to each other, Spain sending to Washington the Duke of Arcos, an eminent diplomatist, previously stationed in Mexico, while the United States transferred to Madrid Hon. Bellamy Storer, its minister at Brussels. This was followed by the respective appointment of consuls, thereby fully resuming the relations interrupted by the war. In addition to its consular representation in the United States, the Spanish Government has appointed consuls for Cuba, who have been provisionally recognized during the military administration of the affairs of that island.

Judicial intercourse between the courts of Cuba and Porto Rico and of Spain has been established, as provided by the treaty of peace. The Cuban political prisoners in Spanish penal stations have been and are being released and returned to their homes, in accordance with Article VI of the treaty. Negotiations are about to be had for defining the conventional relations between the two countries, which fell into abeyance by reason of the war. I trust that these will include a favorable arrangement for commercial reciprocity under the terms of sections 3 and 4 of the current tariff act. In these, as in all matters of international concern, no effort will be spared to respond to the good disposition of Spain, and to cultivate in all practicable ways the intimacy which should prevail between two nations whose past history has so often and in so many ways been marked by sincere friendship and by community of interests.

I would recommend appropriate legislation in order to carry into execution Article VII of the Treaty of Peace with Spain, by which the United States assured the payment of certain claims for indemnity of its citizens against Spain.

The United States minister to Turkey continues, under instructions, to press for a money payment in satisfaction of the just claims for injuries suffered by American citizens in the disorders of several years past and for wrongs done to them by the Ottoman authorities. Some of these claims are of many years' standing. This Government is hopeful of a general agreement in this regard.

In the Turkish Empire the situation of our citizens remains unsatisfactory. Our efforts during nearly forty years to bring about a convention of naturalization seem to be on the brink of final failure through the announced policy of the Ottoman Porte to refuse recognition of the alien status of native Turkish subjects naturalized abroad since 1867. Our statutes do not allow this Government to admit any distinction between the treatment of native and naturalized Americans abroad, so that ceaseless controversy arises in cases where persons owing in the eye of international law a dual allegiance are prevented from entering Turkey or are expelled after entrance. Our law in this regard contrasts with that of the European States. The British act, for instance, does not claim effect for the naturalization of an alien in the event of his return to his native country, unless the change be recognized by the law of that country or stipulated by treaty between it and the naturalizing State.

The arbitrary treatment, in some instances, of American productions in Turkey has attracted attention of late, notably in regard to our flour. Large shipments by the recently opened direct steamship line to Turkish ports have been denied entrance on the score that, although of standard composition and unquestioned purity, the flour was pernicious to health because of deficient "elasticity," as indicated by antiquated and untrustworthy tests. Upon due protest by the American minister, and it appearing that the act was a virtual discrimination against our product, the shipments in question were admitted. In these, as in all instances, wherever occurring, when American products may be subjected in a foreign country, upon specious pretexts, to discrimination compared with the like products of another country, this Government will use its earnest efforts to secure fair and equal treatment for its citizens and their goods. Failing this, it will not hesitate to apply whatever corrective may be provided by the statutes.

The International Commission of Arbitration, appointed under the Anglo-Venezuelan treaty of 1897, rendered an award on October 3d last, whereby the boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana is determined, thus ending a controversy which has existed for the greater part of the century. The award, as to which the arbitrators were unanimous, while not meeting the extreme contention of either party, gives to Great Britain a large share of the interior territory in dispute and to Venezuela the entire mouth of the Orinoco, including Barima Point and the Caribbean littoral for some distance to the eastward. The decision appears to be equally satisfactory to both parties.

Venezuela has once more undergone a revolution. The insurgents, under General Castro, after a sanguinary engagement in which they suffered much loss, rallied in the mountainous interior and advanced toward the capital. The bulk of the army having sided with the movement, President Andrade quitted Caracas, where General Castro set up a provisional government with which our minister and the representatives of other powers entered into diplomatic relations on the 20th of November, 1899.

The fourth section of the Tariff Act approved July 24th, 1897, appears to provide only for commercial treaties which should be entered into by the President and also ratified by the Senate within two years from its passage. Owing to delays inevitable in negotiations of this nature, none of the treaties initiated under that section could be concluded in time for ratification by the Senate prior to its adjournment on the 4th of March last. Some of the pending negotiations, however, were near conclusion at that time, and the resulting conventions have since been signed by the plenipotentiaries. Others, within both the third and fourth sections of the act, are still under consideration. Acting under the constitutional power of the Executive in respect to treaties, I have deemed it my duty, while observing the limitations of concession provided by the fourth section, to bring to a conclusion all pending negotiations, and submit them to the Senate for its advice and consent.

Conventions of reciprocity have been signed during the Congressional recess with Great Britain for the respective colonies of British Guiana, Barbados, Bermuda, Jamaica, and Turks and Caicos islands, and with the Republic of Nicaragua.

Important reciprocal conventions have also been concluded with France and with the Argentine Republic.

In my last Annual Message the progress noted in the work of the diplomatic and consular officers in collecting information as to the industries and commerce of other countries, and in the care and promptitude with which their reports are printed and distributed, has continued during the past year, with increasingly valuable results in suggesting new sources of demand for American products and in pointing out the obstacles still to be overcome in facilitating the remarkable expansion of our foreign trade. It will doubtless be gratifying to Congress to learn that the various agencies of the Department of State are co-operating in these endeavors with a zeal and effectiveness which are not only receiving the cordial recognition of our business interests, but are exciting the emulation of other governments. In any rearrangement of the great and complicated work of obtaining official data of an economic character which Congress may undertake it is most important, in my judgment, that the results already secured by the efforts of the Department of State should be carefully considered with a view to a judicious development and increased utility to our export trade.

The interest taken by the various States forming the International Union of American Republics in the work of its organic bureau is evidenced by the fact that for the first time since its creation in 1890 all the republics of South and Central America are now represented in it.

The unanimous recommendation of the International American Conference, providing for the International Union of American Republics, stated that it should continue in force during a term of ten years from the date of its organization, and no country becoming a member of the union should cease to be a member until the end of said period of ten years, and unless twelve months before the expiration of said period a majority of the members of the union had given to the Secretary of State of the United States official notice of their wish to terminate the union at the end of its first period, that the union should continue to be maintained for another period of ten years, and thereafter, under the same conditions, for successive periods of ten years each.

The period for notification expired on July 14, 1899, without any of the members having given the necessary notice of withdrawal. Its maintenance is therefore assured for the next ten years. In view of this fact and of the numerous questions of general interest and common benefit to all of the republics of America, some of which were considered by the first International American Conference, but not finally settled, and others which have since then grown to importance, it would seem expedient that the various Republics constituting the Union should be invited to hold at an early date another conference in the capital of one of the countries other than the United States, which has already enjoyed this honor.

The purely international character of the work being done by the Bureau and the appreciation of its value are further emphasized by the active cooperation which the various governments of the Latin-American Republics and their diplomatic representatives in this capital are now exhibiting and the zealous endeavors they are making to extend its field of usefulness, to promote through it commercial intercourse, and strengthen the bonds of amity and confidence between its various members and the nations of this continent.

The act to encourage the holding of the Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901, was approved on March 3, 1899.

This Exposition, which will be held in the city of Buffalo, in the near vicinity of the great Niagara cataract, and within a day's journey of which reside 40,000,000 of our people, will be confined entirely to the Western Hemisphere. Satisfactory assurances have already been given by the diplomatic representatives of Great Britain, Mexico, the Central and South American republics, and most of the States of the United States that these countries and States will make an unique, interesting, and instructive exhibit, peculiarly illustrative of their material progress during the century which is about to close.

The law provides an appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of making an exhibit at the Exposition by the Government of the United States from its Executive Departments and from the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of the American Republics. To secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of this Government exhibit a board of management has already been created, and charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, and safe-keeping of the articles and materials to be exhibited. This board has been organized and has already entered upon the performance of its duties, as provided for by the law.

I have every reason to hope and believe that this Exposition will tend more firmly to cement the cordial relations between the nations on this continent.

In accordance with an act of Congress approved December 21, 1898, and under the auspices of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, a most interesting and valuable exposition of products and manufactures especially adapted to export trade was held in Philadelphia from the 14th of September to the 1st of December, 1899. The representative character of the exhibits and the widespread interest manifested in the special objects of the undertaking afford renewed encouragement to those who look confidently to the steady growth of our enlarged exportation of manufactured goods, which has been the most remarkable fact in the economic development of the United States in recent years. A feature of this exposition which is likely to become of permanent and increasing utility to our industries is the collection of samples of merchandise produced in various countries with special reference to particular markets, providing practical object lessons to United States manufacturers as to qualities, styles, and prices of goods such as meet the special demands of consumers and may be exported with advantage.

In connection with the Exposition an International Commercial

Congress was held, upon the invitation of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, transmitted by the Department of State to the various foreign governments, for an exchange of information and opinions with the view to the promotion of international trade. This invitation met with general and cordial acceptance, and the Congress, which began its sessions at the Exposition on the 18th of October, proved to be of great practical importance, from the fact that it developed a general recognition of the interdependence of nations in trade and a most gratifying spirit of accommodation with reference to the gradual removal of existing impediments to reciprocal relations, without injury to the industrial interests of either party.

In response to the invitation of His Majesty the Emperor of Russia, delegates from 26 countries were assembled at The Hague on the 18th of May, as members of a conference in the interest of peace. The commission from the United States consisted of the Hon. Andrew D. White, the Hon. Seth Low, the Hon. Stanford Newel, Capt. Alfred T. Mahan, of the United States Navy, Capt. William Crozier, of the United States Army, and the Hon. Frederick W. Holls, secretary. The occasion seemed to be opportune for the serious consideration of a plan for the pacific adjustment of international differences, a subject in which the American people have been deeply interested for many years, and a definite project for a permanent international tribunal was included in the instructions to the delegates of the United States.

The final act of the conference includes conventions upon the amelioration of the laws and customs of war on land, the adaptation to maritime warfare of the principles of the Geneva Convention of 1864, and the extension of judicial methods to international cases. The Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Conflicts embodies the leading features of the American plan, with such modifications as were rendered necessary by the great diversity of views and interests represented by the delegates. The four titles of the convention provide for the maintenance of general peace, the exercise of good offices and mediation, the formation of commissions of inquiry, and international arbitration.

The mediation provided for by the convention is purely voluntary and advisory, and is intended to avoid any invasion or limitation of the sovereign rights of the adhering states. The commissions of inquiry proposed consist of delegations to be specifically constituted for particular purposes by means of conventions between the contesting parties, having for their object the clear understanding of international differences before resorting to the use of force. The provision for arbitration contemplates the formation of a permanent tribunal before which disputed cases may be brought for settlement by the mutual consent of the litigants in each separate case. The advantages of such a permanent tribunal over impromptu commissions of arbitration are conceived to be the actual existence of a competent court, prepared to administer justice, the greater economy resulting from a well-devised system, and the accumulated judicial skill and experience which such a tribunal would soon possess.

While earnestly promoting the idea of establishing a permanent international tribunal, the delegation of the United States was not unmindful of the inconveniences which might arise from an obtrusive exercise of mediation, and in signing the convention carefully guarded the historic position of the United States by the following declaration:

Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Thus interpreted, the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Conflicts may be regarded as realizing the earnest desire of great numbers of American citizens, whose deep sense of justice, expressed in numerous resolutions and memorials, has urged them to labor for this noble achievement. The general character of this convention, already signed by the delegates of more than twenty sovereign states, further commends it to the favorable action of the Senate of the United States, whose ratification it still awaits.

Since my last Annual Message, and in obedience to the acts of the Congress of April 23 and 26, 1898, the remaining volunteer force enlisted for the Spanish war, consisting of 34,834 regulars and 110,203 volunteers, with over 5,000 volunteer officers, has been discharged from the military service. Of the volunteers, 667 officers and 14,831 men were serving in the Philippines, and 1,650 of the regulars, who were entitled to be mustered out after the ratification of the treaty of peace. They voluntarily remained at the front until their places could be filled by new troops. They were returned home in the order in which they went to Manila, and are now all of them out of the service and in the ranks of citizenship. I recommend that the Congress provide a special medal of honor for the volunteers, regulars, sailors, and marines on duty in the Philippines who voluntarily remained in the service after their terms of enlistment had expired.

By the act of March 2, 1899, Congress gave authority to increase the Regular Army to a maximum not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, and to enlist a force of 35,000 volunteers, to be recruited from the country at large. By virtue of this authority the Regular Army has been increased to the number of 61,999 enlisted men and 2,248 officers, and new volunteer regiments have been organized aggregating 33,050 enlisted men and 1,534 officers. Two of these volunteer regiments are made up of colored men, with colored line officers. The new troops to take the places of those returning from the Philippines have been transported to Manila to the number of 581 officers and 26,322 enlisted men of the Regular Army and 594 officers and 15,388 enlisted men of the new volunteer force, while 504 officers and 14,119 men of the volunteer force are on the ocean en route to Manila.

The force now in Manila consists of 905 officers and 30,578 regulars, and 594 officers and 15,388 of the volunteers, making an aggregate of 1,499 officers and 45,966 men. When the troops now under orders shall reach Manila the force in the archipelago will comprise 2,051 officers and 63,483 men. The muster out of the great volunteer army organized for the Spanish war and the creation of a new army, the transportation from Manila to San Francisco of those entitled to discharge, and the transportation of the new troops to take their places have been a work of great magnitude well and ably done, for which too much credit can not be given the War Department.

During the past year we have reduced our force in Cuba and Porto Rico. In Cuba we now have 334 officers and 10,796 enlisted men; in Porto Rico, 87 officers and 2,855 enlisted men and a battalion of 400 men composed of native Porto Ricans; while stationed throughout the United States are 910 officers and 17,317 men, and in Hawaii 12 officers and 453 enlisted men.

The operations of the Army are fully presented in the report of the Secretary of War. I can not withhold from officers and men the highest commendation for their soldierly conduct in trying situations, their willing sacrifices for their country, and the integrity and ability with which they have performed unusual and difficult duties in our island possessions.

In the organization of the volunteer regiments authorized by the act of March 2, 1899, it was found that no provision had been made for chaplains. This omission was doubtless from inadvertence. I recommend the early authorization for the appointment of one chaplain for each of said regiments. These regiments are now in the Philippines, and it is important that immediate action be had.

In restoring peaceful conditions, orderly rule, and civic progress in Cuba, Porto Rico, and, so far as practicable, in the Philippines, the rehabilitation of the postal service has been an essential and important part of the work. It became necessary to provide mail facilities both for our forces of occupation and for the native population. To meet this requirement has involved a substantial reconstruction. The existing systems were so fragmentary, defective, and inadequate that a new and comprehensive organization had to be created. American trained officials have been assigned to the directing and executive positions, while natives have been chiefly employed in making up the body of the force. In working out this plan the merit rule has been rigorously and faithfully applied.

The appointment of Director-General of Posts of Cuba was given to an expert who had been Chief Post-Office Inspector and Assistant Postmaster-General, and who united large experience with administrative capacity. For the postmastership at Havana the range of skilled and available men was scanned, and the choice fell upon one who had been twenty years in the service as deputy postmaster and postmaster of a large city. This principle governed and determined the selection of the American officials sent not only to Cuba, but to Porto Rico and the Philippines, and they were instructed to apply it so far as practicable in the employment of the natives as minor postmasters and clerks. The postal system in Cuba, though remaining under the general guidance of the Postmaster-General, was made essentially independent. It was felt that it should not be a burden upon the postal service of the United States, and provision was made that any deficit in the postal revenue should be a charge upon the general revenues of the island.

Though Porto Rico and the Philippines hold a different relation to the United States, yet, for convenience of administration, the same principle of an autonomous system has been extended to them. The development of the service in all of the islands has been rapid and successful. It has moved forward on American lines, with free delivery, money order, and registry systems, and has given the people mail facilities far greater and more reliable than any they have ever before enjoyed. It is thus not only a vital agency of industrial, social, and business progress, but an important influence in diffusing a just understanding of the true spirit and character of American administration.

The domestic postal service continues to grow with extraordinary rapidity. The expenditures and the revenues will each exceed $100,000,000 during the current year. Fortunately, since the revival of prosperous times the revenues have grown much faster than the expenditures, and there is every indication that a short period will witness the obliteration of the annual deficit. In this connection the report of the Postmaster-General embodies a statement of some evils which have grown up outside of the contemplation of law in the treatment of some classes of mail matter which wrongly exercise the privilege of the pound rate, and shows that if this matter had been properly classified and had paid the rate which it should have paid, instead of a postal deficit for the last fiscal year of $6,610,000, there would have been on one basis a surplus of $17,637,570, and on another of $5,733,836. The reform thus suggested, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, would not only put the postal service at once on a self-sustaining basis, but would permit great and valuable improvements, and I commend the subject to the consideration of the Congress.

The Navy has maintained the spirit and high efficiency which have always characterized that service, and has lost none of the gallantry in heroic action which has signalized its brilliant and glorious past. The Nation has equal pride in its early and later achievements. Its habitual readiness for every emergency has won the confidence and admiration of the country. The people are interested in the continued preparation and prestige of the Navy and will justify liberal appropriations for its maintenance and improvement. The officers have shown peculiar adaptation for the performance of new and delicate duties which our recent war has imposed.

It can not be doubted that Congress will at once make necessary provision for the armor plate for the vessels now under contract and building. Its attention is respectfully called to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, in which the subject is fully presented. I unite in his recommendation that the Congress enact such special legislation as may be necessary to enable the Department to make contracts early in the coming year for armor of the best quality that can be obtained in this country for the Maine, Ohio, and Missouri, and that the provision of the act of March 3, 1899, limiting the price of armor to $300 per ton be removed.

In the matter of naval construction Italy and Japan, of the great powers, laid down less tonnage in the year 1899 than this country, and Italy alone has less tonnage under construction. I heartily concur in the recommendations for the increase of the Navy, as suggested by the Secretary.

Our future progress and prosperity depend upon our ability to equal, if not surpass, other nations in the enlargement and advance of science, industry, and commerce. To invention we must turn as one of the most powerful aids to the accomplishment of such a result. The attention of the Congress is directed to the report of the Commissioner of Patents, in which will be found valuable suggestions and recommendations.

On the 30th of June, 1899, the pension roll of the United States numbered 991,519. These include the pensioners of the Army and Navy in all our wars. The number added to the rolls during the year was 40,991. The number dropped by reason of death, remarriage, minors by legal limitation, failure to claim within three years, and other causes, was 43,186, and the number of claims disallowed was 107,919. During the year 89,054 pension certificates were issued, of which 37,077 were for new or original pensions. The amount disbursed for army and navy pensions during the year was $138,355,052.95, which was $1,651,461.61 less than the sum of the appropriations.

The Grand Army of the Republic at its recent national encampment held in Philadelphia has brought to my attention and to that of the Congress the wisdom and justice of a modification of the third section of the act of June 27, 1890, which provides pensions for the widows of officers and enlisted men who served ninety days or more during the War of the Rebellion and were honorably discharged, provided that such widows are without other means of support than their daily labor and were married to the soldier, sailor, or marine on account of whose service they claim pension prior to the date of the act.

The present holding of the Department is that if the widow's income aside from her daily labor does not exceed in amount what her pension would be, to wit, $96 per annum, she would be deemed to be without other means of support than her daily labor, and would be entitled to a pension under this act; while if the widow's income independent of the amount received by her as the result of her daily labor exceeds $96, she would not be pensionable under the act. I am advised by the Commissioner of Pensions that the amount of the income allowed before title to pension would be barred has varied widely under different administrations of the Pension Office, as well as during different periods of the same administration, and has been the cause of just complaint and criticism.

With the approval of the Secretary of the Interior the Commissioner of Pensions recommends that, in order to make the practice at all times uniform and to do justice to the dependent widow, the amount of income allowed independent of the proceeds of her daily labor should be not less than $250 per annum, and he urges that the Congress shall so amend the act as to permit the Pension Office to grant pensionable status to widows under the terms of the third section of the act of June 27, 1890, whose income aside from the proceeds of daily labor is not in excess of $250 per annum. I believe this to be a simple act of justice and heartily recommend it.

The Dawes Commission reports that gratifying progress has been made in its work during the preceding year. The fieldwork of enrollment of four of the nations has been completed. I recommend that Congress at an early day make liberal appropriation for educational purposes in the Indian Territory.

In accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, the preliminary work in connection with the Twelfth Census is now fully under way. The officers required for the proper administration of the duties imposed have been selected. The provision for securing a proper enumeration of the population, as well as to secure evidence of the industrial growth of the Nation, is broader and more comprehensive than any similar legislation in the past. The Director advises that every needful effort is being made to push this great work to completion in the time limited by the statute. It is believed that the Twelfth Census will emphasize our remarkable advance in all that pertains to national progress.

Under the authority of the act of Congress approved July 7, 1898, the commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Interior has made an agreement of settlement, which has had my approval, of the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific railroads. The agreement secures to the Government the principal and interest of said bonds, amounting to $58,812,715.48. There has been paid thereon $11,762,543.12, which has been covered into the Treasury, and the remainder, payable within ten years, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, is secured by the deposit of an equal amount of first-mortgage bonds of the Pacific Railway companies. The amounts paid and secured to be paid to the Government on account of the Pacific Railroad subsidy claims are:

Union Pacific, cash	$58,448,223.75
Kansas Pacific, cash	6,303,000.00
Central and Western Pacific, cash	11,798,314.14
Notes, secured	47,050,172.36
Kansas Pacific—dividends for deficiency due
United States, cash	821,897.70

Making a total of 124,421,607.95

The whole indebtedness was about $130,000,000, more than half of which consisted of accrued interest, for which sum the Government has realized the entire amount less about $6,000,000 within a period of two years.

On June 30, 1898, there were thirty forest reservations (exclusive of the Afognak Forest and Fish Culture Reserve in Alaska), embracing an estimated area of 40,719,474 acres. During the past year two of the existing forest reserves, the Trabuco Canyon (California) and Black Hills (South Dakota and Wyoming) have been considerably enlarged, the area of the Mount Rainier Reserve, in the State of Washington, has been somewhat reduced, and six additional reserves have been established, namely, the San Francisco Mountains (Arizona), the Black Mesa (Arizona), Lake Tahoe (California), Gallatin (Montana), Gila River (New Mexico), and Fish Lake (Utah), the total estimated area of which is 5,205,775 acres. This makes at the present time a total of thirty-six forest reservations, embracing an estimated area of 46,021,899 acres. This estimated area is the aggregated areas within the boundaries of the reserves. The lands actually reserved are, however, only the vacant public lands therein, and these have been set aside and reserved for sale or settlement in order that they may be of the greatest use to the people.

Protection of the national forests, inaugurated by the Department of the Interior in 1897, has been continued during the past year and much has been accomplished in the way of preventing forest fires and the protection of the timber. There are now large tracts covered by forests which will eventually be reserved and set apart for forest uses. Until that can be done Congress should increase the appropriations for the work of protecting the forests.

The Department of Agriculture is constantly consulting the needs of producers in all the States and Territories. It is introducing seeds and plants of great value and promoting fuller diversification of crops. Grains, grasses, fruits, legumes, and vegetables are imported for all parts of the United States. Under this encouragement the sugar-beet factory multiplies in the North and far West, semitropical plants are sent to the South, and congenial climates are sought for the choice productions of the far east. The hybridizing of fruit trees and grains is conducted in the search for varieties adapted to exacting conditions. The introduction of tea gardens into the Southern States promises to provide employment for idle hands, as well as to supply the home market with tea. The subject of irrigation where it is of vital importance to the people is being carefully studied, steps are being taken to reclaim injured or abandoned lands, and information for the people along these lines is being printed and distributed.

Markets are being sought and opened up for surplus farm and factory products in Europe and in Asia. The outlook for the education of the young farmer through agricultural college and experiment station, with opportunity given to specialize in the Department of Agriculture, is very promising. The people of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands should be helped, by the establishment of experiment stations, to a more scientific knowledge of the production of coffee, india rubber, and other tropical products, for which there is demand in the United States.

There is widespread interest in the improvement of our public highways at the present time, and the Department of Agriculture is co-operating with the people in each locality in making the best possible roads from local material and in experimenting with steel tracks. A more intelligent system of managing the forests of the country is being put in operation and a careful study of the whole forestry problem is being conducted throughout the United States. A very extensive and complete exhibit of the agricultural and horticultural products of the United States is being prepared for the Paris Exposition.

On the 10th of December, 1898, the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain was signed. It provided, among other things, that Spain should cede to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands, that the United States should pay to Spain the sum of twenty millions of dollars, and that the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories thus ceded to the United States should be determined by the Congress. The treaty was ratified by the Senate on the 6th of February, 1899, and by the Government of Spain on the 19th of March following. The ratifications were exchanged on the 11th of April and the treaty publicly proclaimed. On the 2d of March the Congress voted the sum contemplated by the treaty, and the amount was paid over to the Spanish Government on the 1st of May.

In this manner the Philippines came to the United States. The islands were ceded by the Government of Spain, which had been in undisputed possession of them for centuries. They were accepted not merely by our authorized commissioners in Paris, under the direction of the Executive, but by the constitutional and well-considered action of the representatives of the people of the United States in both Houses of Congress. I had every reason to believe, and I still believe, that this transfer of sovereignty was in accordance with the wishes and the aspirations of the great mass of the Filipino people.

From the earliest moment no opportunity was lost of assuring the people of the islands of our ardent desire for their welfare and of the intention of this Government to do everything possible to advance their interests. In my order of the 19th of May, 1898, the commander of the military expedition dispatched to the Philippines was instructed to declare that we came not to make war upon the people of that country, "nor upon any party or faction among them, but to protect them in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights." That there should be no doubt as to the paramount authority there, on the 17th of August it was directed that "there must be no joint occupation with the insurgents;" that the United States must preserve the peace and protect persons and property within the territory occupied by their military and naval forces; that the insurgents and all others must recognize the military occupation and authority of the United States. As early as December 4, before the cessation, and in anticipation of that event, the commander in Manila was urged to restore peace and tranquillity and to undertake the establishment of a beneficent government, which should afford the fullest security for life and property.

On the 21st of December, after the treaty was signed, the commander of the forces of occupation was instructed "to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come, not as invaders and conquerors, but as friends to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights." On the same day, while ordering General Otis to see that the peace should be preserved in Iloilo, he was admonished that: "It is most important that there should be no conflict with the insurgents." On the 1st day of January, 1899, urgent orders were reiterated that the kindly intentions of this Government should be in every possible way communicated to the insurgents.

On the 21st of January I announced my intention of dispatching to Manila a commission composed of three gentlemen of the highest character and distinction, thoroughly acquainted with the Orient, who, in association with Admiral Dewey and Major-General

Otis, were instructed "to facilitate the most humane and effective extension of authority throughout the islands, and to secure with the least possible delay the benefits of a wise and generous protection of life and property to the inhabitants." These gentlemen were Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell University; the Hon. Charles Denby, for many years minister to China, and Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of the University of Michigan, who had made a most careful study of life in the Philippines. While the treaty of peace was under consideration in the Senate these Commissioners set out on their mission of good will and liberation. Their character was a sufficient guaranty of the beneficent purpose with which they went, even if they had not borne the positive instructions of this Government, which made their errand preeminently one of peace and friendship.

But before their arrival at Manila the sinister ambition of a few leaders of the Filipinos had created a situation full of embarrassment for us and most grievous in its consequences to themselves. The clear and impartial preliminary report of the Commissioners, which I transmit herewith, gives so lucid and comprehensive a history of the present insurrectionary movement that the story need not be here repeated. It is enough to say that the claim of the rebel leader that he was promised independence by any officer of the United States in return for his assistance has no foundation in fact and is categorically denied by the very witnesses who were called to prove it. The most the insurgent leader hoped for when he came back to Manila was the liberation of the islands from the Spanish control, which they had been laboring for years without success to throw off.

The prompt accomplishment of this work by the American Army and Navy gave him other ideas and ambitions, and insidious suggestions from various quarters perverted the purposes and intentions with which he had taken up arms. No sooner had our army captured Manila than the Filipino forces began to assume an attitude of suspicion and hostility which the utmost efforts of our officers and troops were unable to disarm or modify. Their kindness and forbearance were taken as a proof of cowardice. The aggressions of the Filipinos continually increased until finally, just before the time set by the Senate of the United States for a vote upon the treaty, an attack, evidently prepared in advance, was made all along the American lines, which resulted in a terribly destructive and sanguinary repulse of the insurgents.

Ten days later an order of the insurgent government was issued to its adherents who had remained in Manila, of which General Otis justly observes that "for barbarous intent it is unequalled in modern times." It directs that at 8 o'clock on the night of the 15th of February the "territorial militia" shall come together in the streets of San Pedro armed with their bolos, with guns and ammunition where convenient; that Filipino families only shall be respected; but that all other individuals, of whatever race they may be, shall be exterminated without any compassion. After the extermination of the army of occupation, and adds: "Brothers, we must avenge ourselves on the Americans and exterminate them, that we may take our revenge for the infamies and treacheries which they have committed upon us. Have no compassion upon them; attack with vigor." A copy of this fell by good fortune into the hands of our officers and they were able to take measures to control the rising, which was actually attempted on the night of February 22d, a week later than was originally contemplated. Considerable numbers of armed insurgents entered the city by waterways and swamps and in concert with confederates inside attempted to destroy Manila by fire. They were kept in check during the night and the next day driven out of the city with heavy loss.

This was the unhappy condition of affairs which confronted our Commissioners on their arrival in Manila. They had come with the hope and intention of co-operating with Admiral Dewey and Major-General Otis in establishing peace and order in the archipelago and the largest measure of self-government compatible with the true welfare of the people. What they actually found can best be set forth in their own words:

Deploable as war is, the one in which we are now engaged was unavoidable by us. We were attacked by a bold, adventurous, and enthusiastic army. No alternative was left to us except ignominious retreat.

It is not to be conceived of that any American would have sanctioned the surrender of Manila to the insurgents. Our obligations to other nations and to the friendly Filipinos and to ourselves and our flag demanded that force should be met by force. Whatever the future of the Philippines may be, there is no course open to us now except the prosecution of the war until the insurgents are reduced to submission. The Commission is of the opinion that there has been no time since the destruction of the Spanish squadron by Admiral Dewey when it was possible to withdraw our forces from the islands either with honor to ourselves or with safety to the inhabitants.

The course thus clearly indicated has been unflinchingly pursued. The rebellion must be put down. Civil government can not be thoroughly established until order is restored. With a devotion and gallantry worthy of its most brilliant history, the Army, ably and loyally assisted by the Navy, has carried on this unwelcome but most righteous campaign with richly deserved success. The noble self-sacrifice with which our soldiers and sailors whose terms of service had expired refused to avail themselves of their right to return home as long as they were needed at the front forms one of the brightest pages in our annals. Although their operations have been somewhat interrupted and checked by a rainy season of unusual violence and duration, they have gained ground steadily in every direction, and now look forward confidently to a speedy completion of their task.

The unfavorable circumstances connected with an active campaign have not been permitted to interfere with the equally important work of reconstruction. Again I invite your attention to the report of the Commissioners for the interesting and encouraging details of the work already accomplished in the establishment of peace and order and the inauguration of self-governing municipal life in many portions of the archipelago. A notable beginning has been made in the establishment of a government in the island of Negros which is deserving of special consideration. This was the first island to accept American sovereignty. Its people unreservedly proclaimed allegiance to the United States and adopted a constitution looking to the establishment of a popular government. It was impossible to guarantee to the people of Negros that the constitution so adopted should be the ultimate form of government. Such a question, under the treaty with Spain and in accordance with our own Constitution and laws, came exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Congress. The government actually set up by the inhabitants of Negros eventually proved unsatisfactory to the natives themselves. A new system was put into force by order of the Major-General Commanding the Department, of which the following are the most important elements:

It was ordered that the government of the island of Negros should consist of a military governor appointed by the United States military governor of the Philippines, and a civil governor and an advisory council elected by the people. The military governor was authorized to appoint secretaries of the treasury, interior, agriculture, public instruction, an attorney-general, and an auditor. The seat of government was fixed at Bacolod. The military governor exercises the supreme executive power. He is to see that the laws are executed, appoint to office, and fill all vacancies in office not otherwise provided for, and may, with the approval of the military governor of the Philippines, remove any officer from office. The civil governor advises the military governor on all public civil questions and presides over the advisory council. He, in general, performs the duties which are performed by secretaries of state in our own system of government.

The advisory council consists of eight members elected by the people within territorial limits which are defined in the order of the commanding general.

The times and places of holding elections are to be fixed by the military governor of the island of Negros. The qualifications of voters are as follows:

(1) A voter must be a male citizen of the island of Negros. (2) Of the age of 21 years. (3) He shall be able to speak, read, and write the English, Spanish, or Visayan language, or he must own real property worth $500, or pay a rental on real property of the value of $1,000. (4) He must have resided in the island not less than one year preceding, and in the district in which he offers to register as a voter not less than three months immediately preceding the time he offers to register. (5) He must register at a time fixed by law before voting. (6) Prior to such registration he shall have paid all taxes due by him to the Government. Provided, that no insane person shall be allowed to register or vote.

The military governor has the right to veto all bills or resolutions adopted by the advisory council, and his veto is final if not disapproved by the military governor of the Philippines.

The advisory council discharges all the ordinary duties of a legislature. The usual duties pertaining to said offices are to be performed by the secretaries of the treasury, interior, agriculture, public instruction, the attorney-general, and the auditor.

The judicial power is vested in three judges, who are to be appointed by the military governor of the island. Inferior courts are to be established.

Free public schools are to be established throughout the populous districts of the island, in which the English language shall be taught, and this subject will receive the careful consideration of the advisory council.

The burden of government must be distributed equally and equitably among the people. The military authorities will collect and receive the customs revenue, and will control postal matters and Philippine inter-island trade and commerce.

The military governor, subject to the approval of the military governor of the Philippines, determines all questions not specifically provided for and which do not come under the jurisdiction of the advisory council.

The authorities of the Sulu Islands have accepted the succession of the United States to the rights of Spain, and our flag floats over that territory. On the 10th of August, 1899, Brig. Gen. J. C. Bates, United States Volunteers, negotiated an agreement with the Sultan and his principal chiefs, which I transmit herewith. By Article I the sovereignty of the United States over the whole archipelago of Jolo and its dependencies is declared and acknowledged.

The United States flag will be used in the archipelago and its dependencies, on land and sea. Piracy is to be suppressed, and the Sultan agrees to co-operate heartily with the United States authorities to that end and to make every possible effort to arrest and bring to justice all persons engaged in piracy. All trade in domestic products of the archipelago of Jolo when carried on with any part of the Philippine Islands and under the American flag shall be free, unlimited, and undutiable. The United States will give full protection to the Sultan in case any foreign nation should attempt to impose upon him. The United States will not sell the island of Jolo or any other island of the Jolo archipelago to any foreign nation without the consent of the Sultan. Salaries for the Sultan and his associates in the administration of the islands have been agreed upon to the amount of $700 monthly.

Article X provides that any slave in the archipelago of Jolo shall have the right to purchase freedom by paying to the master the usual market value. The agreement by General Bates was made subject to confirmation by the President and to future modifications by the consent of the parties in interest. I have confirmed said agreement, subject to the action of the Congress, and with the reservation, which I have directed shall be communicated to the Sultan of Jolo, that this agreement is not to be deemed in any way to authorize or give the consent of the United States to the existence of slavery in the Sulu archipelago. I communicate these facts to the Congress for its information and action.

Everything indicates that with the speedy suppression of the Tagalo rebellion life in the archipelago will soon resume its ordinary course under the protection of our sovereignty, and the people of those favored islands will enjoy a prosperity and a freedom which they have never before known. Already hundreds of schools are open and filled with children. Religious freedom is sacredly assured and enjoyed. The courts are dispensing justice. Business is beginning to circulate in its accustomed channels. Manila, whose inhabitants were fleeing to the country a few months ago, is now a populous and thriving mart of commerce. The earnest and unremitting endeavors of the Commission and the Admiral and Major-General Commanding the Department of the Pacific to assure the people of the beneficent intentions of this Government have had their legitimate effect in convincing the great mass of them that peace and safety and prosperity and stable government can only be found in a loyal acceptance of the authority of the United States.

The future government of the Philippines rests with the Congress of the United States. Few graver responsibilities have ever been confided to us. If we accept them in a spirit worthy of our race and our traditions, a great opportunity comes with them. The islands lie under the shelter of our flag. They are ours by every title of law and equity. They can not be abandoned. If we desert them we leave them at once to anarchy and finally to barbarism. We fling them, a golden apple of discord, among the rival powers, no one of which could permit another to seize them unquestioned. Their rich plains and valleys would be the scene of endless strife and bloodshed. The advent of Dewey's fleet in Manila Bay instead of being, as we hope, the dawn of a new day of freedom and progress, will have been the beginning of an era of misery and violence worse than any which has darkened their unhappy past. The suggestion has been made that we could renounce our authority over the islands and, giving them independence, could retain a protectorate over them. This proposition will not be found, I am sure, worthy of your serious attention. Such an arrangement would involve at the outset a cruel breach of faith. It would place the peaceable and loyal majority, who ask nothing better than to accept our authority, at the mercy of the minority of armed insurgents. It would make us responsible for the acts of the insurgent leaders and give us no power to control them. It would charge us with the task of protecting them against each other and defending them against any foreign power with which they chose to quarrel. In short, it would take from the Congress of the United States the power of declaring war and vest that tremendous prerogative in the Tagalo leader of the hour.

It does not seem desirable that I should recommend at this time a specific and final form of government for these islands. When peace shall be restored it will be the duty of Congress to construct a plan of government which shall establish and maintain freedom and order and peace in the Philippines. The insurrection is still existing, and when it terminates further information will be required as to the actual condition of affairs before inaugurating a permanent scheme of civil government. The full report of the Commission, now in preparation, will contain information and suggestions which will be of value to Congress, and which I will transmit as soon as it is completed. As long as the insurrection continues the military arm must necessarily be supreme. But there is no reason why steps should not be taken from time to time to inaugurate governments essentially popular in their form as fast as territory is held and controlled by our troops. To this end I am considering the advisability of the return of the Commission, or such of the members thereof as can be secured, to aid the existing authorities and facilitate this work throughout the islands. I have believed that reconstruction should not begin by the establishment of one central civil government for all the islands, with its seat at Manila, but rather that the work should be commenced by building up from the bottom, first establishing municipal governments and then provincial governments, a central government at last to follow.

Until Congress shall have made known the formal expression of its will I shall use the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightfully floats. I shall put at the disposal of the Army and Navy all the means which the liberality of Congress and the people have provided to cause this unprovoked and wasteful insurrection to cease. If any orders of mine were required to insure the merciful conduct of military and naval operations, they would not be lacking; but every step of the progress of our troops has been marked by a humanity which has surprised even the misguided insurgents. The truest kindness to them will be a swift and effective defeat of their present leader. The hour of victory will be the hour of clemency and reconstruction.

No effort will be spared to build up the waste places desolated by war and by long years of misgovernment. We shall not wait for the end of strife to begin the beneficent work. We shall continue, as we have begun, to open the schools and the churches, to set the courts in operation, to foster industry and trade and agriculture, and in every way in our power to make these people whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance. Our flag has never waved over any community but in blessing. I believe the Filipinos will soon recognize the fact that it has not lost its gift of benediction in its world-wide journey to their shores.

Some embarrassment in administration has occurred by reason of the peculiar status which the Hawaiian Islands at present occupy under the joint resolution of annexation approved July 7, 1898. While by that resolution the Republic of Hawaii as an independent nation was extinguished, its separate sovereignty destroyed, and its property and possessions vested in the United States, yet a complete establishment for its government under our system was not effected. While the municipal laws of the islands not enacted for the fulfillment of treaties and not inconsistent with the joint resolution or contrary to the Constitution of the United States or any of its treaties remain in force, yet these laws relate only to the social and internal affairs of the islands, and do not touch many subjects of importance which are of a broader national character. For example, the Hawaiian Republic was divested of all title to the public lands in the islands, and is not only unable to dispose of lands to settlers desiring to take up homestead sites, but is without power to give complete title in cases where lands have been entered upon under lease or other conditions which carry with them the right to the purchaser, lessee, or settler to have a full title granted to him upon compliance with the conditions prescribed by law or by his particular agreement of entry.

Questions of doubt and difficulty have also arisen with reference to the collection of tonnage tax on vessels coming from Hawaiian ports; with reference to the status of Chinese in the islands, their entrance and exit therefrom; as to patents and copyrights; as to the register of vessels under the navigation laws; as to the necessity of holding elections in accordance with the provisions of the Hawaiian statutes for the choice of various officers, and as to several other matters of detail touching the interests both of the island and of the Federal Government.

By the resolution of annexation the President was directed to appoint five commissioners to recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the islands as they should deem necessary or proper. These commissioners were duly appointed and after a careful investigation and study of the system of laws and government prevailing in the islands, and of the conditions existing there, they prepared a bill to provide a government under the title of "The Territory of Hawaii." The report of the Commission, with the bill which they prepared, was transmitted by me to Congress on December 6, 1898, but the bill still awaits final action.

The people of these islands are entitled to the benefits and privileges of our Constitution, but in the absence of any act of Congress providing for Federal courts in the islands, and for a procedure by which appeals, writs of error, and other judicial proceedings necessary for the enforcement of civil rights may be prosecuted, they are powerless to secure their enforcement by the judgment of the courts of the United States. It is manifestly important, therefore, that an act shall be passed as speedily as possible erecting these islands into a judicial district, providing for the appointment of a judge and other proper officers and methods of procedure in appellate proceedings, and that the government of this newly acquired territory under the Federal Constitution shall be fully defined and provided for.

A necessity for immediate legislative relief exists in the Territory of Alaska. Substantially the only law providing a civil government for this Territory is the act of May 17, 1884. This is meager in its provisions, and is fitted only for the administration of affairs in a country sparsely inhabited by civilized people and unimportant in trade and production, as was Alaska at the time this act was passed. The increase in population by immigration during the past few years, consequent upon the discovery of gold, has produced such a condition as calls for more ample facilities for local self-government and more numerous conveniences of civil and judicial administration. Settlements have grown up in various places, constituting in point of population and business cities of thousands of inhabitants, yet there is no provision of law under which a municipality can be organized or maintained.

In some localities the inhabitants have met together and voluntarily formed a municipal organization for the purpose of local government, adopting the form of a municipal constitution and charter, under which said officials have been appointed; and ordinances creating and regulating a police force, a fire department, a department of health, and making provision for the care of the insane and indigent poor and sick and for public schools, have been passed. These proceedings and the ordinances passed by such municipalities are without statutory authority and have no sanction, except as they are maintained by the popular sentiment of the community. There is an entire absence of authority to provide the ordinary instruments of local police control and administration, the population consisting of the usual percentage of lawless adventurers of the class that always flock to new fields of enterprise or discovery, and under circumstances which require more than ordinary provision for the maintenance of peace, good order, and lawful conduct.

The whole vast area of Alaska comprises but one judicial district, with one judge, one marshal, and one district attorney, yet the civil and criminal business has more than doubled within the past year, and is many times greater both in volume and importance than it was in 1884. The duties of the judge require him to travel thousands of miles to discharge his judicial duties at the various places designated for that purpose. The Territory should be divided into at least two districts, and an additional judge, district attorney, marshal, and other appropriate officers be provided.

There is practically no organized form of government in the Territory. There is no authority, except in Congress, to pass any law, no matter how local or trivial, and the difficulty of conveying to the Congress an adequate conception and understanding of the various needs of the people in the different communities is easily understood. I see no reason why a more complete form of Territorial organization should not be provided. Following the precedent established in the year 1805, when a temporary government was provided for the recently acquired territory, then known under the name of Louisiana, it seems to me that it would be advantageous to confer greater executive power upon the governor and to establish, as was done in the case of the Territory of Louisiana, a legislative council having power to adopt ordinances which shall extend to all the rightful subjects of local legislation, such ordinances not to take effect until reported to and approved by the Congress if in session, and if that body is not in session then by the President. In this manner a system of laws providing for the incorporation and government of towns and cities having a certain population, giving them the power to establish and maintain a system of education to be locally supported, and ordinances providing for police, sanitary, and other such purposes, could be speedily provided. I believe a provision of this kind would be satisfactory to the people of the Territory. It is probable that the area is too vast and the population too scattered and transitory to make it wise at the present time to provide for an elective legislative body, but the conditions calling for local self-government will undoubtedly very soon exist, and will be facilitated by the measures which I have recommended.

I recommend that legislation to the same end be had with reference to the government of Porto Rico. The time is ripe for the adoption of a temporary form of government for this island; and many suggestions made with reference to Alaska are applicable also to Porto Rico.

The system of civil jurisprudence now adopted by the people of this island is described by competent lawyers who are familiar with it, as thoroughly modern and scientific, so far as it relates to matters of internal business, trade, production, and social and private right in general. The cities of the island are governed under charters which probably require very little or no change.

So that with relation to matters of local concern and private right, it is not probable that much, if any, legislation is desirable; but with reference to public administration and the relations of the island to the Federal Government, there are many matters which are of pressing urgency. The same necessity exists for legislation on the part of Congress to establish Federal courts and Federal jurisdiction in the island as has been previously pointed out by me with reference to Hawaii. Besides the administration of justice, there are the subjects of the public lands; the control and improvement of rivers and harbors; the control of the waters or streams not navigable, which, under the Spanish law, belonged to the Crown of Spain, and have by the treaty of cession passed to the United States; the immigration of people from foreign countries; the importation of contract labor; the imposition and collection of internal revenue; the application of the navigation laws; the regulation of the current money; the establishment of post-offices and post-roads; the regulation of tariff rates on merchandise imported from the island into the United States; the establishment of ports of entry and delivery; the regulation of patents and copyrights; these, with various other subjects which rest entirely within the power of the Congress, call for careful consideration and immediate action.

It must be borne in mind that since the cession Porto Rico has been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty. The markets of Spain are closed to her products except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without customs duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports. She has therefore lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba without any compensating benefits in this market. Her coffee was little known and not in use by our people, and therefore there was no demand here for this, one of her chief products. The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Porto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

As a result of the hurricane which swept over Porto Rico on the 8th of August, 1899, over 100,000 people were reduced to absolute destitution, without homes, and deprived of the necessities of life. To the appeal of the War Department the people of the United States made prompt and generous response. In addition to the private charity of our people, the War Department has expended for the relief of the distressed $392,342.63, which does not include the cost of transportation.

It is desirable that the government of the island under the law of belligerent right, now maintained through the Executive Department, should be superseded by an administration entirely civil in its nature. For present purposes I recommend that Congress pass a law for the organization of a temporary government, which shall provide for the appointment by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, of a governor and such other officers as the general administration of the island may require, and that for legislative purposes upon subjects of a local nature not partaking of a Federal character a legislative council, composed partly of Porto Ricans and partly of citizens of the United States, shall be nominated and appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, their acts to be subject to the approval of the Congress or the President prior to going into effect. In the municipalities and other local subdivisions I recommend that the principle of local self-government be applied at once, so as to enable the intelligent citizens of the island to participate in their own government and to learn by practical experience the duties and requirements of a self-contained and self-governing people. I have not thought it wise to commit the entire government of the island to officers selected by the people, because I doubt whether in habits, training, and experience they are such as to fit them to exercise at once so large a degree of self-government; but it is my judgment and expectation that they will soon arrive at an attainment of experience and wisdom and self-control that will justify conferring upon them a much larger participation in the choice of their insular officers.

The fundamental requirement for these people, as for all people, is education. The free schoolhouse is the best preceptor for citizenship. In the introduction of modern educational methods care, however, must be exercised that changes be not made too abruptly and that the history and racial peculiarities of the inhabitants shall be given due weight. Systems of education in these new possessions founded upon common-sense methods, adapted to existing conditions and looking to the future moral and industrial advancement of the people, will commend to them in a peculiarly effective manner the blessings of free government.

The love of law and the sense of obedience and submission to the lawfully constituted judicial tribunals are embedded in the hearts of our people, and any violation of these sentiments and disregard of their obligations justly arouses public condemnation. The guarantees of life, liberty, and of civil rights should be faithfully upheld; the right of trial by jury respected and defended. The rule of the courts should assure the public of the prompt trial of those charged with criminal offenses, and upon conviction the punishment should be commensurate with the enormity of the crime.

Those who, in disregard of law and the public peace, unwilling to await the judgment of court and jury, constitute themselves judges and executioners should not escape the severest penalties for their crimes.

What I said in my Inaugural Address of March 4, 1897, I now repeat:

The constituted authorities must be cheerfully and vigorously upheld. Lynchings must not be tolerated in a great and civilized country like the United States. Courts, not mobs, must execute the penalties of the laws. The preservation of public order, the right of discussion, the integrity of courts, and the orderly administration of justice must continue forever the rock of safety upon which our Government securely rests.

In accordance with the act of Congress providing for an appropriate national celebration in the year 1900 of the establishment of the seat of Government in the District of Columbia, I have appointed a committee, consisting of the governors of all the States and Territories of the United States, who have been invited to assemble in the city of Washington on the 21st of December, 1899, which, with the committees of the Congress and the District of Columbia, are charged with the proper conduct of this celebration.

Congress at its last session appropriated $5,000 "to enable the Chief of Engineers of the Army to continue the examination of the subject and to make or secure designs, calculations, and estimates for a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property." In accordance with the provisions of this act the Chief of Engineers has selected four eminent bridge engineers to submit competitive designs for a bridge combining the elements of strength and durability and such architectural embellishment and ornamentation as will fitly apply to the dedication, "A memorial to American patriotism." The designs are now being prepared, and as soon as completed will be submitted to the Congress by the Secretary of War. The proposed bridge would be a convenience to all the people from every part of the country who visit the national cemetery, an ornament to the Capital of the Nation, and forever stand as a monument to American patriotism. I do not doubt that Congress will give to the enterprise still further proof of its favor and approval.

The Executive order of May 6, 1896, extending the limits of the classified service, brought within the operation of the civil-service law and rules nearly all of the executive civil service not previously classified.

Some of the inclusions were found wholly illogical and unsuited to the work of the several Departments. The application of the rules to many of the places so included was found to result in friction and embarrassment. After long and very careful consideration it became evident to the heads of the Departments, responsible for their efficiency, that in order to remove these difficulties and promote an efficient and harmonious administration certain amendments were necessary. These amendments were promulgated by me in Executive order dated May 29, 1899.

The principal purpose of the order was to except from competitive examination certain places involving fiduciary responsibilities or duties of a strictly confidential, scientific, or executive character which it was thought might better be filled either by noncompetitive examination, or in the discretion of the appointing officer, than by open competition. These places were comparatively few in number. The order provides for the filling of a much larger number of places, mainly in the outside service of the War Department, by what is known as the registration system, under regulations to be approved by the President, similar to those which have produced such admirable results in the navy-yard service.

All of the amendments had for their main object a more efficient and satisfactory administration of the system of appointments established by the civil-service law. The results attained show that under their operation the public service has improved and that the civil-service system is relieved of many objectionable features which heretofore subjected it to just criticism and the administrative officers to the charge of unbusinesslike methods in the conduct of public affairs. It is believed that the merit system has been greatly strengthened and its permanence assured. It will be my constant aim in the administration of government in our new possessions to make fitness, character, and merit essential to appointment to office, and to give to the capable and deserving inhabitants preference in appointments.

The 14th of December will be the One Hundredth Anniversary of the death of Washington. For a hundred years the Republic has had the priceless advantage of the lofty standard of character and conduct which he bequeathed to the American people. It is an inheritance which time, instead of wasting, continually increases and enriches. We may justly hope that in the years to come the benignant influence of the Father of his Country may be even more potent for good than in the century which is drawing to a close. I have been glad to learn that in many parts of the country the people will fittingly observe this historic anniversary.

Presented to this Congress are great opportunities. With them come great responsibilities. The power confided to us increases the weight of our obligations to the people, and we must be profoundly sensible of them as we contemplate the new and grave problems which confront us. Aiming only at the public good, we can not err. A right interpretation of the people's will and of duty can not fail to insure wise measures for the welfare of the islands which have come under the authority of the United States, and inure to the common interest and lasting honor of our country. Never has this Nation had more abundant cause than during the past year for thankfulness to God for manifold blessings and mercies, for which we make reverent acknowledgment.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 5, 1899.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the message of the President will be laid upon the table, and the usual number of copies will be ordered to be printed.

DEATH OF SENATOR-ELECT HAYWARD.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, it becomes my painful duty to announce that the Hon. Monroe L. Hayward, Senator-elect from the State of Nebraska for the term commencing March 4, 1899, departed this life at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes this morning, at his home in Nebraska City. On some future and fit occasion it is my purpose to present and ask consideration by the Senate of appropriate memorial resolutions. At the present time I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions offered by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Monroe L. Hayward, lately elected Senator from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 6, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO WAIT UPON PRESIDENT.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed, in connection with a similar committee from the Senate, to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses are in attendance ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, have performed the duty assigned to them, and the President was pleased to say that he would communicate with Congress forthwith in writing.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

COMMITTEE ON MILEAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the following as the Committee on Mileage: Mr. BARHAM of California, Mr. REEDER of Kansas, Mr. STEWART of New York, Mr. COOPER of Texas, and Mr. LEWIS of Georgia.

CHANGES OF MEMBERSHIP SINCE LAST SESSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, showing the changes in membership since last session; which was ordered to be printed in the Journal and RECORD:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Washington, D. C., December 4, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following list of changes since the election of the Fifty-sixth House of Representatives:

* Died.

† Resigned.

Very respectfully,

A. McDOWELL,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

HON. DAVID B. HENDERSON,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ELECTION CONTESTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also desires to submit to the House the report of the Clerk on contested-election cases. The Chair will assign the first three cases—one, two, and three—to Election Committee No. 1; four, five, and six, to Committee No. 2; seven, eight, and nine, to Committee No. 3; and ten to Committee No. 1. The report will be printed as a public document.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual message of the President: which was read.

[For text of message see proceedings of the Senate of this date.]

On the conclusion of the reading there was loud applause on the Republican side.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and printed.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from New York moves that the President's message be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and be printed.

Mr. GROW. Before that motion is put, I ask: Is the message itself debatable? If so, I should like to make a few remarks on the most important subject contained in it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible to hear what the gentlemen are saying, and we would like to have order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will please resume their seats and preserve order. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROW. On a motion to refer, Mr. Speaker, I take it, the message itself would be debatable. If so, I should like to make some remarks on the most important subject of the message.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that it would be debatable in the House. Of course when we go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it would be debatable, and I have no doubt an arrangement could be made by which my friend from Pennsylvania could fully address himself to the subject.

Mr. GROW. Very well. I am content.

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how many copies would be printed under his motion? I suggest that he specify 20,000 copies.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no provision made for that. That will be considered later.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from New York will yield to me, I will state to my colleague from Tennessee that the law provides that 20,000 copies shall be printed.

The motion to refer was then agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Monroe L. Hayward, lately Senator from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House on yesterday it is agreed that immediately after the reading of the President's message the House would proceed to consider the following resolutions, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is charged that Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas such charge is made through a member of this House, on his responsibility as such member and on the basis, as he asserts, of public records, affidavits, and papers evidencing such ineligibility:

Resolved, That the question of the prima facie right of Brigham H. Roberts to be sworn in as a Representative from the State of Utah in the Fifty-sixth Congress, as well as of his final right to a seat therein as such Representative, be referred to a special committee of nine members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker; and until such committee shall report upon and the House decide such question and right the said Brigham H. Roberts shall not be sworn in or be permitted to occupy a seat in this House; and said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath in relation to the subject-matter of this resolution.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a confirmation here of the arrangement made with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] as to the length of time the discussion on this resolution shall endure. I believe the understanding is that one hour and a quarter on a side is to be allotted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; or an hour and a half on a side, inasmuch as the gentleman from Ohio insisted that the time used by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Roberts] should be charged to the minority. We thought he ought to have his own time within which to present his own case, and then, if we were given an hour, that would be satisfactory. The gentleman from Ohio would not agree to that, and we finally asked for an hour and a half, and I hope the gentleman will agree to give us an hour and a half on this side.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The difficulty about that is that the hour to which the debate will run will not be fixed. I thought it wise to fix the time when the debate should end before we begin it. I suppose the member-elect from Utah will discuss the same side of the question as will the gentlemen represented by the gentleman from Tennessee, and therefore that time ought all to be counted together.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know what line of argument the gentleman from Utah will make, and I thought that he ought to have his own time in which to debate it. If the gentleman will give us an hour and a half, I think we can get through.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself, I have no objection to the gentlemen on the other side having one hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. And the same length of time for your side?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The same length of time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is for three hours' debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is agreed between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] and myself that the substitute we shall offer may be read and considered pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Brigham H. Roberts, from the State of Utah, has presented a certificate of election in due and proper form as a Representative from said State; Therefore, be it Resolved, That without expressing any opinion as to the right or propriety of his retaining his seat in advance of any proper investigation thereof, the said Brigham H. Roberts is entitled to be sworn in as a member of this House upon his prima facie case.

Resolved further, That when sworn in his credentials and all the papers in relation to his right to retain his seat be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report thereon at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I understand that is merely read for information.

The SPEAKER. It is read for the information of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want it considered as pending.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I may want to make a motion affecting it.

Mr. Speaker, I am not unmindful of the importance of the question which the House is about to decide. It is unusual, but not unprecedented. It ought not to be resorted to for partisan purposes or for trivial reasons. Nor would I urge it now if I did not believe that a proper sense of our duty demanded it. We do not undertake to determine now the right of the claimant to a seat here, but only whether or not he shall be halted at the bar of the House and await the administration of the oath of office to him until a committee of the House and the House itself shall determine that right. If upon investigation it shall develop that the claimant is entitled to his seat, then an injustice will be done him by keeping him out. But that injustice is not comparable to the injustice and wrong that will result to the House and to the country if, being ineligible in the respects charged, he should sit for one hour as a member of the House. A due respect for the opinion of the country and for this House demands that, notwithstanding the preliminary character of this question, it shall be argued with reasonable fullness now.

Of course, I do not need to say that in so far as such a thing is possible I have not prejudged this case either as to the law or the facts. If it shall appear that the allegations made against him be false, I will welcome the claimant to a place on this floor. If the facts be as alleged and they create no lawful ineligibility, I will vote to permit him to take his seat on the floor of the House.

In the first place, I will minister to a much desired brevity and lucidity if I read the eighth section of what is known as the Edmunds Act and briefly quote from the proclamation of amnesty made by President Cleveland and before him by President Harrison.

SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment, or to be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place or under the United States.

The proclamation of President Harrison, dated January 4, 1893, has this pardoning clause:

Do hereby declare and grant full amnesty and pardon to all persons liable to the penalties of this act by reason of unlawful cohabitation under the color of polygamous or plural marriages who, since November 1, 1890, have abstained from such unlawful cohabitation, but upon the express condition that they shall in future obey the laws of the United States hereinbefore named, and not otherwise.

The proclamation of President Cleveland granted pardon in this language:

To all persons who have, in violation of said act, committed either of the offenses of polygamy, adultery, or unlawful cohabitation under the color of polygamous or plural marriages, or who, having been convicted of violation of said act, are now suffering deprivation of civil rights in consequence of the same, excepting persons who have not complied with the conditions contained in said proclamation of January 4, 1893.

Mr. Speaker, Utah was admitted as a State into the Union on the 4th day of January, 1896.

These are the alleged facts against the claimant:

First. That he was indicted in February, 1887, for unlawful cohabitation under the Edmunds Act, and pleaded guilty April 29, 1889, and was incarcerated on that account in the penitentiary for four months.

Second. That he has persistently from that time forward down to a recent date been guilty of the offense of unlawful cohabitation, and also that he has continued from the date of his conviction to be, and is now, a polygamist.

Now, these propositions and questions are presented by the alleged facts:

First. That if he was convicted in 1889 under the Edmunds Act, did he not then become, and ever afterwards remain, by reason of section 8, ineligible to be a member of Congress unless he was pardoned? If he was guilty of polygamous cohabitation between November 1, 1890, and the date of the Harrison proclamation, he was not pardoned by that proclamation.

The Harrison proclamation pardoned no polygamist as such. If Roberts was a polygamist January 3, 1893, and prior thereto, even though not convicted, he did not receive pardon.

If, after January 3, 1893, and before September 25, 1894, he was guilty of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation, then he lost the benefit of the Harrison proclamation and the Cleveland proclamation did not affect him at all.

If, after September 25, 1894, and before January 4, 1896, the date of Utah's admission, he was either a polygamist or unlawfully cohabited, the pardons did not affect him.

All these things are charged, and it is claimed, on the basis of ex parte affidavits, can be proved.

Second. If he has been persistently guilty of the offense of which he was convicted, and has been ever since up to January 4, 1896, the date of the admission of Utah, a polygamist, is he not ineligible under the Edmunds law, independent of his conviction?

Third. If he has been ever since 1889 and is now a polygamist, may he not be ineligible to be a member of Congress if it so wills, independent of the ineligibility created by the Edmunds law? I will later on give the definition by the Supreme Court of a polygamist.

Fourth. Is it clear that the compact created between the United States and the people of Utah by the proclamations, enabling act, constitution of Utah, and the political history associated with these facts do not justify the House in refusing admission to the claimant?

Fifth. May it not be that upon a careful examination of the law it will be found that the claimant is not a citizen of the United States?

Sixth. Is it wise, if the facts be as alleged, except as to the status of the claimant as a present lawbreaker, to subject his case to the doubtful process of expulsion?

Doubtful for two reasons:

First. Because it requires the concurrence of two-thirds to expel him.

Second. Because very eminent lawyers from the beginning of the Government down to the present time have taken the position that the House has no right to expel except for some misconduct while a member and relating to his office as a member.

The House of Representatives has never decided that it had the power to expel under such circumstances, and it has decided that it has no right to expel under such circumstances.

In the first session of the Thirty-fifth Congress, the Congress of which our honored friend and colleague, Mr. GROW, was a member, one Matteson, against whom a resolution of expulsion had been passed in the preceding Congress, came, and a resolution to expel him for the offense for which they had expelled him in the preceding Congress was introduced, was referred to a committee of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] was a member, and that committee, by an all but unanimous voice, reported that the House had no power, mean and low and vile as the character of that man was, as exhibited by his conduct before that time, to expel him, because it had no right to expel a man for that which had occurred prior to his election to Congress. And the House, by a considerable majority, sustained the committee, and Matteson, who was declared unfit to be a Representative in Congress because of his connection with certain bribers and bribe takers, was permitted to remain further unquestioned as a member of the United States House of Representatives.

And so I give this warning to those of you who oppose the passage of this resolution in the fond hope that hereafter, if these facts be as alleged, you may satisfy your consciences and constituents by voting to expel the claimant. I warn you now that you will have a larger difficulty to satisfy your consciences and your judgments that this House has power to expel the claimant than that it has the right and power to exclude him now.

I shall not undertake to discuss all of the questions I have raised. Time forbids, and it is not otherwise necessary.

Two broad questions are raised in this case:

First. Is the claimant on the alleged facts eligible to be a member of Congress?

Second. Can the question of his eligibility be raised when he comes to the bar to be sworn, and can he be required to stand aside until the House shall have investigated the question of his right to take the seat?

On the first proposition, as to the question of eligibility, we must inquire first whether Congress has power to impose qualifications in addition to those enumerated in the Constitution; second, whether Congress has imposed any qualification—if it has that right; and third, has Congress, independent of any previously enacted law, the right to impose a qualification or declare a disqualification when a member-elect comes to the bar?

There are six different provisions in the Constitution respecting qualifications of a member of Congress. First, that he shall not be a member unless he shall have attained the age of 25 years; second, he shall have been a citizen of the United States for seven years; third, that he must be an inhabitant of the State where chosen; fourth, that he may be disqualified by judgment in cases of impeachment; fifth, a person holding an office under the United States shall not be a member of either House of Congress; and sixth, the provision in the constitutional amendment respecting those who have taken an oath inconsistent with their acts during the war of the rebellion.

There is no decision of the United States Supreme Court upon the question as to whether Congress has the power to add to the qualifications named. There has been much academic discussion of the subject. Some very excellent authority has declared that Congress has no such power. But, notwithstanding a feeling of reverence for the opinion of some men, I shall proceed briefly to combat that position.

Our State courts in many instances have construed exactly similar provisions. The supreme court of the State of New York, in the case of Rogers vs. Buffalo, in an opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Peckham, who now adorns the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, held that a provision of the Constitution declaring certain qualifications for office was not exclusive and did not bar the legislature from imposing new, reasonable, and proper qualifications.

In a very learned opinion by one of the ablest judges that ever sat on the bench in Ohio, Judge McIlvaine, in the case of Ohio against Covington, the same doctrine is explicitly and carefully and most forcibly laid down, and in the case of Darrow against The People, in 8 Colorado, where a negative provision of the constitution exactly similar in its rhetorical construction to that I am now discussing was under consideration, it was held that as the provision of their constitution was negative, it imposed no restriction whatever upon the legislative body.

But I find stronger intrinsic argument right in the body of the Constitution itself against this authority to restrict the power of the House.

In the first place, the language providing for the age, and so on, is negative in its character. No person shall become a member of Congress unless he is of a certain age, etc. And that clause of the Constitution was most ably and ingeniously and persuasively argued in 1807 upon the floor of the House of Representatives by John Randolph. I think no man can read that argument without being convinced at least as to the power of Congress.

But, in the next place, I want to call your attention to the last paragraph of Article VI. Here we have the argument, by analogy, that, in my opinion, modestly put forward, is conclusive upon the question of construction:

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

There is a positive affirmative declaration by the Constitution that a certain oath shall be administered to certain officers. If the construction contended for as to the qualification of members of Congress is correct, then Congress has no power to demand any other oath of any officer named in this section than that which is named in it.

Mr. Chief Justice Marshall had occasion to refer to that when he said, in the case of McCullough against Maryland, one of the greatest expositions of the Constitution to be found in the reports of the Supreme Court:

He would be charged with insanity who should contend that the legislature might not superadd to the oath directed by the Constitution such other oath of office as its wisdom might suggest.

Now, if John Marshall characterized as insanity a proposition that a positive declaration of the Constitution respecting an oath could not be added to, I shudder to think what word he would have used had he been referring to the mere adding to a negative expression of the Constitution.

But that same clause has another paragraph in it:

But no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Now, if the Constitution had laid down all the qualifications which Congress or any other power had the right to impose, then it was unnecessary they should go on and declare that no religious test could be required. The Constitution is inconsistent in its parts and contradictory of itself if it be true that it meant that no qualification should be added except those named. If without the provision about a religious test such test might have been required, then the asserted interpretation of the qualification clauses falls to the ground. The presence of the religious-test clause is only to be explained and justified on the ground that without it Congress would have had the power to impose it.

But the construction here contended for has often been asserted and passed upon by the House of Representatives in numerous cases that have been here decided. I shall not advert to them specifically now, for the reason that they become more pertinent as we proceed to the second broad question as to our right to stop the claimant at this point. But our statutes are full, fairly swarming with penal provisions declaring that persons who have committed certain offenses are ineligible to office or place under the United States; and all down along the line, from the very first Congress that sat, down until we had a complete penal system, Congress has recognized, and it has not been disputed, the right to declare persons ineligible to office for the commission of crime.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not need for the purposes of this case to stand upon the broad right of Congress to add qualifications to those named in the Constitution. The ineligibility created in connection with the punishment of crime may and does arise out of the power inherent in Congress to punish crime; and in its spirit this does not conflict with the Constitution. It bars the way to no man against his will; it conflicts in no sense with the freedom of any man to follow any pursuit he pleases, and to put himself in any class which he may desire to put himself in. The ineligible class created by penal statutes is one that no man can enter without committing a crime. Do you think it violates either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution to say that no free agent who has every right that the laws or the Constitution ought to give to any man shall be barred from office unless he willfully goes into the criminal class?

Now, that proposition is not without authority. It is most cogently stated and reasoned and laid down in the well-known case of Barker against The People in 3 Cowen. I ought to say at this point that in that case the court first held—although it did not need to so hold—that every man was eligible for office who was not specifically disqualified by the Constitution. It thus directly opposes the position I took a moment ago; but the court goes on to elaborately show that in the way of punishment for crime the legislature had ample power and authority to disqualify.

But I ought also to say that Mr. Justice Peckham, in the case of Rogers against Buffalo, to which I referred a few moments ago, left nothing standing of the law in the Barker case except the proposition that I stand on here—that we may disqualify for crime—and pointed out most clearly that the position taken in that case, in so far as it meant to declare the want of power in the legislature to add to the constitutional qualifications, was wrong, but that the legislature could not add arbitrary conditions, such as that no man who was a physician could be a candidate for office, and so on.

In the second place, under this head: Has Congress imposed any such qualification as apply to the claimant?

I have already read section 8 of the Edmunds Act. That law is in force to-day. It is a penal law of present operation in all of its parts over the Territories and the District of Columbia, and as to one who has rendered himself amenable to the punishment part of it it is operative everywhere where one is now that has been convicted under that law. That law has been held constitutional in the case of Murphy against Ramsey, in 114 U. S. Reports, page 15. It will be noted that that act makes ineligible not only one guilty of unlawful cohabitation, but also a polygamist, and does not require any conviction in either case. The charge is that the claimant was convicted of the first offense, and that he is now and has been for years a polygamist. Now, what is a polygamist? We are not in doubt as to that. The Supreme Court of the United States has made very clear what that is, and I will be pardoned for reading now very briefly what it has said. I make the following quotation from Murphy vs. Ramsey, 114 U. S., pages 41 and 42:

In our opinion any man is a polygamist or bigamist, in the sense of this section of the act, who, having previously married one wife, still living, and having another at the time when he presents himself to claim registration as a voter, still maintains that relation to a plurality of wives, although from the date of the passage of the act, March 22, 1882, until the day he offers to register and vote, he may not in fact have cohabited with more than one woman. Without regard to the question whether at the time he entered into such relation it was a prohibited and punishable offense, or whether by reason of lapse of time since its commission a prosecution for it may not be barred, if he still maintains the relation, he is a bigamist or polygamist, because that is the status which fixed habit and practice of his living has established. He has a plurality of wives, more than one woman, whom he recognizes as a wife, of whose children he is the acknowledged father, and whom with their children he maintains as a family, of which he is the head. And this status as to several wives may well continue to exist, as a practical relation, although for a period he may not in fact cohabit with more than one; for that is quite consistent with the constant recognition of the same relation to many, accompanied with a possible intention to renew cohabitation with one or more of the others when it may be convenient.

It is not, therefore, because the person has committed the offense of bigamy or polygamy, at some previous time, in violation of some existing statute, and as an additional punishment for its commission, that he is disfranchised by the act of March 22, 1882; nor because he is guilty of the offense, as defined and punished by the terms of the act; but because, having at some time entered into a bigamous or polygamous relation, by a marriage with a second or third wife, while the first was living, he still maintains it, and has not dissolved it, although for the time being he restricts actual cohabitation to but one. He might, in fact, abstain from actual cohabitation with all, and still be much as ever a bigamist or polygamist. He can only cease to be such when he has fully dissolved in some effective manner, which we are not called on here to point out, the very relation of husband to several wives which constitutes the forbidden status he has previously assumed.

Cohabitation is but one of the many incidents to the marriage relation. It is not essential to it. One man, where such a system has been tolerated and practiced, may have several establishments, each of which may be the home of a separate family, none of which he himself may dwell in or even visit. The statute makes an express distinction between bigamists and polygamists on the one hand and those who cohabit with more than one woman on the other; whereas, if cohabitation with several wives was essential to the description of those who are bigamists or polygamists, those words in the statute would be superfluous and unnecessary. It follows, therefore, that any person having several wives is a bigamist or polygamist in the sense of the act of March 22, 1882, although since the date of its passage he may not have cohabited with more than one of them.

Now, I have already stated, and I shall not go on further with it, as to the operation of the two proclamations of amnesty. It is enough for me to say that if the facts be as alleged, the claimant is in no better position than if no proclamation for amnesty had ever been issued.

Finally, upon this subject of ineligibility—and I ask the attention of the House to these measured words—if we consider the great powers of Congress, unrestricted save by the Constitution, we shall see that it can impose qualifications and declare ineligibilities, probably sufficient where crimes or offenses against civilization are concerned, to justify it, and in some instances to command it, to refuse admission to persons thus tainted.

If I am correct in this interpretation of our rights and power, it is not difficult to find its just application to the asserted facts in this case. For all such exercises of power by Congress those who participate in it are answerable only to their consciences, their constituents, and their country.

Mr. Speaker, we are not without precedent upon that proposition. This House, so far from denying this power to act along the line that I have just suggested, has declared its right to exercise that power. In the Forty-first Congress Mr. Whittemore, of South Carolina, for some charge of selling cadetships, was under the ban of the House. A resolution to expel him was about to be adopted when he resigned, and the House lost its jurisdiction and could only pass a resolution of censure. Within six weeks from the date of his resignation he came to the bar of this House with a certificate under the broad seal of the State of South Carolina, exact, perfect, unquestioned, claiming his right to a seat under and by virtue of a new election at the hands of the constituency who knew his offense and sent him here as their representative.

Mr. Speaker, that man had committed a crime, but it was a crime which carried with it ineligibility, possibly not for Congress at all, and never, except after due conviction in the courts of justice in a constitutional manner. But the House did not allow itself to be thus hedged in by any inferior authority. It did not even wait to do the things that we want done here. The House not only did not suspend the administration of the oath until a committee might examine the question and the House later determine, but it said to him then and there, "You shall not now or ever be sworn;" and his credentials were thrown back in his teeth and he never took his seat. That is a case as parallel as two cases can be to the case that we make here, with this difference: Instead of giving the committee time to answer the question whether he was entitled to take the oath of office, they decided it right then and there and sent him back to his people.

This case I take up at this point as sustaining the general proposition I just made, and also as sustaining the second proposition, that the House has the right to halt a man on the ground of ineligibility and declare that he shall not take the oath of office until the question of his eligibility has been answered.

Now, the power and right of the House in this respect are inherent and can not be questioned. It is only a question of propriety; it is only a question of expediency; it is only a question of parliamentary wisdom in order that no unwisdom precedent may be created for a later day. There has been much loose talk in the newspapers and elsewhere about the right and power of Congress and its duty in this regard, and as to what it has done. I do not want to make the statement as absolutely correct, but to this extent: I assert that in so far as my investigation has gone, and it has covered hundreds of cases and many volumes of the Record and Globe, I can find no instance where the House of Representatives has declared that it has not the right and that it ought not to halt a man at the bar of the House when the question of his eligibility was raised.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I have, besides the case to which I have already referred, many others which explicitly declare the right of the House to do just this very thing, and where the House did it and refused to permit the oath to be administered to the applicant.

The general doctrine on this subject is laid down in McCrary's Law of Elections. I read from that not because the citation appears in Judge McCrary's work, but because I have read speeches of, I think, a hundred eminent lawyers and statesmen on the floor of the House where the doctrine laid down by McCrary has been declared and sustained, and I assert that the instances where a contrary doctrine is sought to be asserted by any speaker on the floor of the House, or any lawyer of eminence throughout the country, are so small and so few as to be swallowed up and overwhelmed in the flood of contrary opinion as laid down by the best writers and speakers of the day.

McCrary says—and the first two sentences seem to be all that some people have read on this subject:

The regular certificate of election properly signed is, as we have seen, to be taken as sufficient to authorize the person holding it to be sworn in. It is prima facie evidence of his election, and the only evidence thereof which can be considered in the first instance and in the course of the organization of a legislative body. But there are questions which may be raised touching the qualifications of a person elected which may be investigated and decided as a part of the prima facie case and as preliminary to the swearing in of the claimant.

Time. If a specific and apparently well-grounded allegation be presented to the House of Representatives of the United States that a person holding a certificate of election is not a citizen of the United States, or is not of the requisite age, or is for any other cause ineligible, the House will defer action upon the question of swearing in such person until there can be an investigation into the truth of such allegation.

It is necessary, however, that such allegation should be made by a responsible party. It is usually made, or vouched for at least, by some member or member-elect of the House. It is to be presented at the earliest possible moment after the meeting of the House for organization, and generally at the time that the person objected to presents himself to be sworn in. The person objected to upon such grounds as these is not sworn in with the other members, but stands aside for the time being, and the House, through its committee, with all possible speed proceeds to inquire into the facts.

The certificate of election does not ordinarily, if ever, cover the grounds of the due qualifications of the person holding it. It may be said that by declaring the person duly elected the certificate by implication avers that he was qualified to be elected and to hold the office. But it is well known that canvassing officers do not in fact inquire as to the qualifications of persons voted for; they certify what appears upon the face of the returns and nothing more.

This action, as I have said, Mr. Speaker, has been sustained time and time again on the floor of the House with the overwhelming mass of declarations and testimony of the ablest men of the country, to which I have already referred.

A most elaborate Congressional discussion occurred in the Fortieth Congress as to the Kentucky election. This Congress met in special session on the 4th of March and adjourned to a fixed date about the 1st of April. Immediately after this elections were held in the State of Kentucky. On the 3d of July the Kentucky members presented themselves and demanded the right to be sworn in as members of the House under the House rules. But the House refused to permit them to be sworn in on the ground that they had been disloyal; that is to say, on the ground that they suffered from some ineligibility. This was not an ineligibility created by the Constitution itself, nor created by any existing law of Congress, but because the House held them to be ineligible for the reason that they had been disloyal. The cases were discussed in page after page in the Globe. Report after report was filed in connection with the cases.

The discussion proceeded for some time upon the motion to refuse to administer the oath and to refer the cases to the Committee on Elections.

Representative Bingham, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, on page 472, said:

I submit as a question of order that the resolution by my colleague, Mr. Schenck, is a resolution which goes to the qualification of the member named. The State is entitled to representation upon the presentation of its certificate under its grand seal, and the members are entitled to be sworn in according to the usual precedents of this country, unless special charges be made showing them not entitled or disqualified. They have the right to be sworn in unless there be presented specific cause against them, in which case I say the case ought to be referred to the committee, as proposed by my colleague. I believe my colleague has presented the question exactly according to the established precedents.

Mr. Schenck, on page 477, says:

The House is not asked to declare that John D. Young is not entitled to a seat here, but it is asked to declare upon this showing that he shall not be permitted now to take the oath, but shall stand back until some inquiry shall be made into the truthfulness of these allegations and a report made to the House upon which it can understandingly determine the question ultimately and finally.

On page 479 Mr. Boutwell says:

I think we are justified in taking this position: That when a member rises in his place and states that of his own knowledge or upon information worthy of belief a person presenting himself here for a seat in this House is or has been substantially a traitor to his Government, we have a right to decline to allow that person to take the oath until that matter has been investigated and he has been relieved from the charge.

Many other members made arguments of like character, and it will be difficult to find any serious objection at that time to the action of the House on that ground. The resolution was adopted, and the case went to the Committee on Elections.

On the 5th of July Mr. Marshall rose to a question of privilege, and moved that in the cases of Beck and Grover the Committee on Elections be discharged from further consideration of the question submitted to them. At this time Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, entered the discussion. Mr. Dawes was then the oldest member in respect to service in the House, had been chairman of the Committee on Elections for ten years or more, and may safely be said to be as high authority on the law pertaining to this case as any man who has ever sat in the House of Representatives.

He takes occasion in this debate to state in various forms his views, but the shortest statement of the proposition is found on page 502, in answer to a question from Mr. Wood, of New York. He said:

A well-grounded charge made in good faith against any man bringing a certificate here which extends in its scope to his qualification to sit as a member of this House should be heard before he is permitted to take the oath of office or occupy a seat.

Mr. Bingham again, on page 503, reasserts that—

When a charge is made in due form either upon the responsibility of a member or by petition and ex parte affidavit against a person or persons claiming to be elected as members of this House from an organized State, the case ought to be referred to a committee, and the presentation of such a case, going to the qualifications of a person presenting himself as a member, ought to suspend the administration of the oath to him.

Mr. Dawes's contention was sustained by the House (page 514). The committee in that case in its preliminary report held:

That any specific and apparently well-grounded charge of personal disloyalty made against a person claiming a seat as a member of this House ought to be investigated and reported upon before such person is permitted to take the seat.

On the 17th of July Mr. Brooks rose to a question of privilege respecting the same subject. The discussion proceeded as before, but the immediate question was whether the withdrawal of an affidavit by one of the ex parte witnesses affected the case.

Mr. Dawes more than once in this discussion, on page 700, declares the right to refuse to swear in a man against whom a well-grounded charge of disqualification is made. What he said in one instance is especially applicable here:

I submit that that gentleman [referring to another member] has already committed himself to the doctrine that no matter what crime a man may have committed against his country, he has the right to come here and take a seat in this House, to sit here in mockery of the authority of the Government, pretending to make laws in its support.

He says again, on the same page:

When there is presented alongside of the certificate a case which leads members here, clothed by the Constitution with the power and duty of passing upon the qualifications of those who apply for admission—when there is presented alongside of such a certificate such a case as leads us to suppose that there is good reason to believe that the man presenting himself is disqualified, it is the duty of those whom the Constitution requires to pass upon the qualifications of members to stop at this initial point and pass upon that question.

On the 21st of November, 1867 (Globe, volume 64, page 768), the members-elect from Tennessee were called. Mr. Eldredge objected to swearing in of Mr. Stokes, and moved that his credentials be referred to the Committee on Elections.

The only charge against Stokes was that he had written a letter in May, 1861, containing disloyal sentiments, but it was shown that after that he had fought for two years in the Union Army. He was seated, as he ought to have been.

Mr. Brooks objected to the swearing in of Mr. Butler, Mr. Mullen, and Mr. Arnell, of Tennessee. There was an extended discussion, the facts in each case presented, and the House passed the following substitute on a yea-and-nay vote of 117 yeas and 28 nays, as follows:

That the credentials of R. R. Butler, of the First district of Tennessee, be referred to the Committee on Elections, and that he be not sworn in pending the investigation.

On the 21st of November, in the discussion of the Tennessee case, page 774, Mr. Schenck gives his second well-considered approval of the doctrine.

On page 777 Mr. Shellabarger, of Ohio, puts himself on record as sustaining the doctrine of the committee.

On December 3 the committee filed a second report, found in 3 Bartlett's Election Cases, page 139. In this report the committee assert that they adhere to the views expressed in the first report, on the ground that the House is the judge of the qualifications of its members, of which fidelity to the Constitution is one, and that such charge should be investigated before such person is permitted to take the seat.

The committee calls attention to the fact that the House concurred in that view of the committee.

Again, in a report filed January 7, 1868, the committee announces its continued adherence to the rule previously laid down.

In a report made January 21, 1868, by Mr. Dawes (page 405, 2 Bartlett's), in the John Young Brown case, a very elaborate report, the same doctrine is laid down, and a resolution was reported that Brown was not entitled to take the oath of office or to hold the seat.

In the case of McKee vs. Young (page 434) the same kind of a resolution was presented. This report was made March 23, 1868, and laid down the same doctrine of ineligibility.

On the 31st of January, 1868, the case of Smith vs. Brown came up for discussion in the House, and continued for some days.

The questions were elaborately discussed, especially by Mr. Dawes. (See pages 894, 895.)

Of course at that time the immediate question to determine was as to the general right of Brown to take his seat, and not the question as to the right to halt him at the bar of the House during the organization and refuse to administer the oath. Nevertheless the same question is involved in the lengthy discussion which followed.

On page 899 Mr. Shellabarger's views are very succinctly put in a letter which he wrote while absent from Washington.

A very able and instructive discussion is found in the speech of Mr. Cook, especially on page 909.

The final argument made by Mr. Dawes will be found in volume 69, page 149, Appendix, Fortieth Congress.

Then in the same Congress we find also the case of Winchester and Rice. That was in the next Congress, but the time is unimportant. This is the case of Winchester and Rice, from the State of Kentucky, which came up on the credentials in the midst of the organization of the House, when only about one-half of the members had been sworn in. Objection was made to the swearing in of Winchester on the ground that there was an indictment pending against him in the United States court in Kentucky charging him with disloyalty, and a similar charge against Rice.

An effort was made to have them stand aside by consent. They refused to do it. A resolution was offered that their cases be sent to a committee, and pending the examination of the case by the committee that they be not permitted to be sworn in or take seats. The previous question was demanded; the previous question was ordered by a yea-and-nay vote of the House of 96 to 48, and the main question, which had actually been settled by the calling and settling of the previous question, was about to be put, when Winchester and his companion asked that the case go over until the next day. The next day they came in, and it was apparent from a moment's examination of the testimony that they presented that there was nothing in the charge of disloyalty.

The indictment against Winchester had been dismissed. There was no charge against him; but, nevertheless, the House had taken hold of the question. It had passed upon the question, had assumed and kept jurisdiction of the question, and beyond any sort of controversy would in another instant have sent those cases to the committee had they not voluntarily withdrawn.

Somewhat more in detail the proceedings connected with the organization of the Forty-first Congress are as follows:

At the organization of the House of Representatives in the Forty-first Congress, on the 4th of March, 1869 (Globe, volume 74), after the election of a Speaker, Mr. Butler of Massachusetts, when Maryland was called (page 5), objected to the swearing in of Patrick Hamill, of that State, on a charge of disloyalty. A discussion followed, and pending that the other members who had been called were sworn in.

Finally the Speaker suggested that Mr. Hamill step aside for the present, which was done.

When the State of Kentucky was called (see page 6), Mr. Shanks objected to the swearing in of Boyd Winchester and John M. Rice on the ground that they had been disloyal, and that Winchester was under indictment for disloyalty.

The Speaker suggested that the gentlemen whose right was challenged waive the claim of their right to be sworn in until the other members had taken the oath.

Mr. Eldredge hoped that those gentlemen would not yield their right; thereupon the Speaker said:

Then the question must be decided now. The Clerk will present the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Shanks.

The resolution was therefore read, referring the cases to the Committee on Elections, and that pending such inquiry Winchester and Rice should not be sworn in as members.

Mr. Shanks called for the previous question. While the vote was being taken on ordering the previous question, Mr. McCormick raised the point of order that those who had not been sworn in could not vote. The Speaker refused to entertain the point, as the House was dividing.

The question then came up on ordering the main question. Mr. Eldredge called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

On ordering the previous question there were yeas 96, nays 48; so the previous question was ordered. Then Mr. Eldredge raised the point of order that none but those sworn in had the right to vote. The Speaker overruled the point of order, and held that those not sworn could vote.

It was not until this point that, at the suggestion of one of the Kentucky members, Messrs. Winchester and Rice withdrew for the time being for the sake of removing any obstacle to the progress of business.

The House, however, having ordered the previous question on the proposition to send their cases to the Committee on Elections before being sworn in, and the Chair having held that all members-elect were entitled to vote on the proposition, it is apparent that it put itself squarely in favor of halting at the bar of the House a person charged with ineligibility, and sending his case at once to the committee.

On the following day (see page 13) a resolution was offered by Mr. Beck that Messrs. Winchester and Rice be now sworn in. He accompanied his resolution with a statement showing that the charges against them were untrue, and that the indictment referred to in the proceedings of the day before had been dismissed.

Mr. Shanks, who made the objection, admitted that there was a fair presumption that there was nothing in the case. The resolution was adopted, and Messrs. Winchester and Rice were sworn in.

Objection was also made on the first day to the right of Vanhorn and Dyer, of Missouri, to be sworn in; but the only reason given for objecting was that they were not actually elected—no question of qualification arising.

Messrs. Vanhorn and Dyer, after a brief discussion, temporarily withdrew.

Mr. Lawrence objected to the swearing in of Mr. Rogers as a member from the Second district of Arkansas, but his statement of the case showed only a claim of unfair election.

Mr. Garfield said:

I desire to ask my colleague if all that he is now reading or suggesting from that paper is not clearly a matter that relates to the contest as to the ultimate right of this gentleman to his seat, and not to the prima facie right on the credentials to be sworn in as a member. It seems to me that this person has a right to be sworn in if his credentials are regularly witnessed and there be no personal objections which would prevent him from taking the oath.

On motion of Mr. Farnsworth, Mr. Lawrence's resolution was laid on the table, and Mr. Rogers was sworn in.

At this point the House adjourned.

On the reassembling of the House a resolution was adopted notifying the Senate that the House had assembled, chosen a Speaker, and that it was ready to proceed to business.

This notwithstanding no other officers of the House had been elected.

Thereupon the cases of Vanhorn and Dyer came up on a resolution that they be sworn in.

Mr. Benjamin observed (see page 10) that in these cases there was no point raised as to the eligibility of these parties to occupy seats in the House. It was a question of election, and of course would go to the Committee on Elections, but they were entitled to be sworn in.

A motion to lay the resolution on the table was defeated by a vote of 4 yeas to 163 nays.

This shows that the House took complete jurisdiction of the subject of swearing in the men, and permitted them to be sworn in upon a manifest theory. It was a question merely as to their election, and not as to their eligibility.

Mr. Butler withdrew his objection to the swearing in of Hamill, of Maryland, because he said he had examined the affidavits and evidence in the case and thought that the prima facie case as made by the certificate ought at this time to prevail.

The case was sent to the Committee on Elections and was never heard of again.

Later, the same day, Mr. Farnsworth (page 18) moved that the members from Georgia be sworn in. After considerable discussion Mr. Farnsworth modified his resolution, ordering a reference of the credentials and papers of the Georgia members to the Committee on Elections when appointed, with directions to report to the House whether their papers present a prima facie right to their seats.

These members were therefore not permitted to be sworn in, but their cases passed over under the resolution.

Thereupon a motion was made that the House now proceed to the election of Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, etc.

Before the motion was put Mr. Butler, of Tennessee, rose to a question of privilege and asked leave to present the credentials of Mr. Rogers, of Tennessee, claiming a seat as Representative from that State.

The Speaker refused to entertain it as a question of privilege, holding that it was not as high a question as the election of officers. Thereupon the House proceeded to elect its officers.

I make the following comments on the proceedings connected with the organization of the Forty-first Congress:

(1) After the election of the Speaker, and before all the members were sworn in, the body proceeded to consider questions of the right of members-elect to be sworn in. Some it permitted to be sworn in.

As to Winchester and Rice it practically decided that their cases could be sent to the committee to determine their right to take the oath as well as to seat its members on a question of eligibility, though their credentials were perfect.

(2) In the Georgia case the same thing was done, although it ought to be said that the ground for not settling it at that time was because it was evident that a good deal of time would be spent in the discussion.

(3) The Speaker held that all the members-elect had the right to vote, whether they had been sworn in or not. It is to be presumed that this ruling did not mean that a member-elect had a right to vote on his own case.

(4) Before all the members who had been requested to stand aside had been sworn in, and when the only officer elected was the Speaker, the Senate was notified that the House had chosen the Speaker and was ready to proceed to business.

(5) A committee was appointed to join with a like committee from the Senate to make the usual notification to the President.

(6) The question of the right of the Louisiana members to be sworn in was, before the election of the other officers, referred to the Committee on Elections.

In this case, however, there was question as to whether the credentials on their face were sufficient.

(7) The Speaker refused, on the raising of the question of privilege, to permit Mr. Rogers, of Tennessee, to be sworn in after a motion had been made, but not put, that the House proceed to the election of the other officers.

On the 30th of March, 1870 (Globe, volume 77, page 2299), the credentials of J. C. Connor, claiming a seat as Representative from the State of Texas, were referred to the Committee on Elections.

There seems to have been no demand on the part of Connor to be sworn in.

On page 2323 the Committee on Elections on March 31, 1870, reported in favor of administering the oath to the Representatives-elect from the State of Texas, including Mr. Connor.

Notwithstanding this report on his prima facie right, an effort was made to offer an amendment that Connor be not sworn in, but that his case be referred to the Committee on Elections, with instructions to report both on the prima facie right and on its merits.

The ground for this resolution was stated to be that Connor, whose certificate was in due form, had committed some offense for which he had been tried by a military court of inquiry and acquitted.

Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, appears in this case as the champion of the proposed amendment and against permitting Connor to be sworn in, notwithstanding the report of the committee.

Mr. Dawes spoke on the question, declaring that this was a very different case from those which came from Kentucky in the Fortieth Congress, and repeated his statement of the right and duty of the House where question is made as to the qualification of a person asking to be sworn in.

Many other members took the same ground, but declared that the rule did not apply, as it certainly did not, to a case such as they had under consideration.

In the discussion over the Connor case no serious question seems to have been raised as to the right to stop a member-elect at the bar and refuse to swear him in if the charge of ineligibility was made.

Mr. Banks, on page 2328, asserted the view that while it was not wise always to exercise the high prerogative of refusing to swear a man in, yet that the House had the undoubted power, and that it ought not by any decision ever to seem to doubt or deny its existence.

Mr. Garfield took the same view, on page 2336, saying:

My friend will allow me to say that we may go back to the certificate in anything that touches the constitutional right of a member to a seat.

The resolution reported by the committee in the Connor case was adopted.

At the organization of the Forty-second Congress, March 4, 1871 (Globe, volume 85, page 6), when the name of Alfred M. Waddell, of North Carolina, was called, after the election of Speaker, Mr. Maynard objected to his being sworn in on the ground that he was personally disqualified.

The Speaker said:

Following the course adopted in the organization of past Houses, the Chair will first swear in those members against whom no objection whatever is presented, and the Speaker later on held that Mr. Maynard had the right to make the objection, notwithstanding the fact that he had not been sworn in.

Mr. Waddell accordingly stood aside. No further effort was made in Mr. Waddell's case until after the organization was complete by the election of the other officers.

Accordingly, later in the same day his case was called up and decided on its merits, so that he was permitted to be sworn in.

In the discussion of this case Mr. Maynard, who had objected, said:

As to whether we shall refer his case to the Committee on Elections or whether we will swear him in, I have felt bound from a knowledge of the facts disclosed to me by a gentleman from North Carolina to make presentation of the case to the House that we might follow the same course as in the last Congress and in the Congress before the last, as well as in the Thirty-ninth Congress. It is a safe, prudent, wise, and judicious course, as the experience of the last few years has clearly demonstrated. If this gentleman shall be found able to stand the ordeal of that examination, he can be admitted on the removal of his disabilities.

Although Mr. Maynard grounded his objection on this personal disqualification and the right of the House to administer the oath, no person controverted that position; but the House passed upon the question of his disqualification; consequently he was entitled to be sworn in.

On the same day, after the election of the Speaker and before the other officers had been elected, an objection was made to the swearing in of the Representatives from Tennessee on some ground connected with the validity of the law under which they were elected; but objection was later on withdrawn and the members-elect were sworn in.

Objection was then made to the Mississippi delegation. This involved only the question of manner of election. Mr. Bingham, during the debate (on page 9), says:

I trust, sir, the day is past for challenging the right of any State in this Union to representation on the floor of Congress when her Representatives present themselves with certificates prima facie entitling them to seats, unless the persons so presenting themselves should be challenged as disqualified under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Again, Mr. Bingham (on page 10) says:

According to the traditions of the Republic, when persons come to the bar of this House as Representatives of organized States with a prima facie case of election, and whose personal qualifications are not challenged, it is not usual to deny their admission for the discharge of their duties upon this floor; but it is usual, on the contrary, to admit them and allow them to be sworn in, and if a question arises such as that suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, to wit, an irregularity in the election, it is referred uniformly to the Committee on Elections to ascertain the facts.

Of course this delegation was sworn in and their credentials referred to the Committee on Elections.

Thus we see the House has explicitly declared that it had the right and that it had the power, and that under certain conditions which then existed it would exercise that right and that power, to refuse to administer the oath.

All through these discussions, which I shall not take time to read from, the statement of law is made, almost without being seriously controverted, as laid down in the text of Judge McCrary's book. Mr. Haskell, who was objecting, for another reason, in the Forty-seventh Congress, in the last Cannon case, to the refusal to permit a man to be sworn, quoted the law against himself in this way: That when there is a prima facie case, but two sets of questions can be considered—first, the face of the certificate and the facts revealed in the certificate, and second, those questions going to show the qualifications of the man certified to, as to whether he can take the oath of office or not, and when those two branches of the subject have been exhausted, the prima facie case ends.

There was an able Representative stating all the case he could state for himself while on the other side of the practical proposition that confronts us here.

Mr. Speaker, we are told that this will make an unhappy precedent. Precedent! Why, what we do here we do before the open and gazing eyes of all the world, and we are at once dragged to the bar of history to answer for our deeds. We are no cloistered court. We are no statute-bound tribunal. We are the servants of the people, empowered, thank God, under the Constitution to do the right as we see the right. That is the law that binds us. The public eye is on us; the public conscience quickens us. In that presence and before such a judge we can do no wrong if we obey it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] would not enter upon a discussion of the merits of the question involved in this case. The case which I shall attempt to discuss here and present to the House is one which does not in any sense involve the merits of this controversy. The question which we are called upon to consider, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, is the simple one as to whether the member-elect from Utah, with his credentials regular in form, is entitled to be sworn into this House as a member. I say the consideration of that question does not, in my judgment, involve the merits of the controversy—that is, his right to retain his seat as a member. I can not, sir, give my support to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER]. I am not willing to reject the Representative of a sovereign State of this Union who presents himself at the bar of the House with a proper certificate of election, duly signed, under the great seal of his State, and demands his seat. I have had the credentials of the member-elect from Utah produced and I now ask the Clerk to read those credentials.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF UTAH, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, James T. Hammond, secretary of state of the State of Utah, do hereby certify that on Tuesday, the 8th day of November, A. D. 1898, at the general election held within and for said State, Brigham H. Roberts was duly elected Representative to the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States of America, from the State of Utah, as appears from the returns of said election, which have been duly canvassed and certified.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Utah this 10th day of December, A. D. 1898.

[SEAL.]

J. T. HAMMOND,

Secretary of State.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, these credentials are in due form. The member-elect comes with the same evidence of his rights to a seat that you possess, Mr. Speaker, or as is held by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] who offers the resolution of exclusion, and for one I say I will not unite in making a precedent which may, and which I predict will, inevitably arise in the future to plague those who come after us.

The right of a member to his seat is an exalted one. The right of a State to representation on this floor has never been denied here when she properly commissions a gentleman who is eligible and sends him here. Now, I notice that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] in his arguments, if I could understand him aright, presents only one objection which goes to the constitutional right of the member-elect to his seat. He refers to a charge or a record which he says has been produced, which establishes the fact that the member-elect is not a naturalized citizen or a citizen of Utah. But, Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House to the fact that upon this point the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] does not upon his honor or responsibility as a member charge that this fact is true. I have before me here the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio on yesterday, when he made his objection, in respect to this one constitutional objection to the member-elect from Utah taking his seat. The gentleman uses the following language, which I read from the RECORD:

I ought also to say, in addition to what I have just said, that I have in my possession a certified copy of the court record under which the claimant to this seat was supposed to be naturalized, and that eminent counsel assert that if that be the record in the case—

That if that be the record in the case—

there is grave doubt if the claimant is a citizen of the United States.

It raises a doubt, it seems, in the minds of counsel. But the gentleman adds:

I offer and express no opinion upon that proposition.

The only authority which the gentleman cited which said that you might inquire into the prima facie right of a member who presents himself here to be sworn in related to a constitutional objection and not to other objections such as might justify the expulsion or the exclusion of a member after he was seated.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe there is any precedent which the gentleman can produce which goes to the point of excluding a member-elect or depriving him of his right to be sworn in when he presents himself and demands that right, where there is no constitutional question involved.

The member from Utah, it must be conceded, stands here with credentials regular in every respect, and in so far as any evidence has been adduced he is in every respect eligible and has complied with every constitutional requirement.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to suggest at this point that he read the certificate, or have read the certificate of naturalization that the gentleman from Utah has in his possession? The original certificate is here and in regular form.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I assume that it is true, and that it is in regular form.

But that question does not arise here now, because no gentleman is alleging here upon his responsibility as a member that the member-elect from Utah has not been regularly naturalized as a citizen.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. The resolution does not raise that question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And the resolution does not raise that question, as has been suggested to me by the gentleman from Texas.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of the case by me I do not intend to touch even remotely the merits of the case—that is, the ultimate right of the member to his seat—but to discuss only the prima facie right of the claimant at bar to be sworn and the right of the State to be represented here and now. The merits of the controversy, as I have stated, do not arise in considering this question. The gentleman from Utah may be guilty of the offense and crime intimated and charged; but the fact of his guilt or innocence does not arise in the consideration of the question as to his prima facie right to be sworn as a member, because the investigation into these matters should be made as to his right to hold a seat.

Mr. Speaker, I speak alone for myself in this matter. I do not claim to speak for any party or any organization upon this floor. I have decided and positive convictions upon this question, and I simply want to give utterance to those convictions as I feel I should be bound by them.

I say in the outset, with all the emphasis I can command, if the member from Utah is guilty of the offenses charged against him, he should not be allowed to retain a seat in the House. If there is one thing upon which the American people are one, and upon which they should remain united, it is that the homes of our people and their domestic relations shall be forever preserved in all their loveliness, sweetness, and purity. [Applause.]

But, sir, in considering the pending question these matters do not arise and should not be considered, and no member ought to permit his judgment to be warped by public clamor or by any temporary excitement. I care not what action the House may take after trial has been given to the member. If found guilty as charged, he can be removed from the House in an orderly and becoming fashion; but to condemn him before a hearing is given and to deny him his right to be sworn and to participate in the organization of this House is a condemnation without trial. [Applause.] No severer condemnation can be pronounced against a member, Mr. Speaker, than to deny him the right to be sworn when this House is being organized; and the claimant stands here now, just as he stood on yesterday, by special agreement, when his name was called and he demanded to be sworn as a member to represent his State and participate in the full organization of the House. Mr. Speaker, the act of Congress, as found in section 31 of the Revised Statutes, is as follows, and I ask the attention of members to it. I will read it:

The Clerk of the last House shall make a roll of the Representatives-elect and place thereon the names of those persons and of such persons only whose credentials show that they were regularly elected in accordance with the laws of their States, respectively, or the laws of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you think it is necessary that the certificate should show that the claimant was elected in accordance with the laws of the State or the laws of the United States? Is it necessary that the certificate should show that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not quite hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. HEPBURN. Should the certificate recite the fact that the member was elected in accordance with the laws of the State?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the credentials submitted by the gentleman are in proper form and that they entitle him to a seat. I wish to discuss this question along the lines I have laid out and do not want to be interrupted by questions that interfere with the line of my argument.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood you to say you were reading—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee declines to be interrupted further.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not yield. My time is expiring.

I have read, Mr. Speaker, section 31 of the Revised Statutes. Now, sir, it is made the duty of the Speaker to administer the oath of office to all Members and Delegates present. The statute quoted is mandatory, and it conveys no discretion either to the Clerk or to the Speaker. In the case at bar the Clerk of the last House has discharged his part of the duty, that part enjoined upon him by the section of the statute which I have read. He has examined the credentials of the member from Utah; he has found them in regular and proper form, and, as was his duty, he has placed his name on the roll of Representatives-elect of this House. The Clerk of this House did that on the 4th day of March last, and since that date the member has drawn his salary, has enjoyed the franking privilege, and exercised all other legitimate privileges of a member-elect.

It remains, then, but for the Speaker of this House to comply with the plain provisions of the statute which I have quoted—that is, discharge his duty by administering to the member the oath of office. Any other course will set a most dangerous precedent, and your action will tend inevitably to chaos and revolution.

Mr. Speaker, this body has existed for one hundred and ten years, and for this long and eventful period the certificate of a governor of a State in an unbroken line of precedents has constituted the title of members of this House. The member at the bar holds the title upon which all have been sworn at the beginning of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] has presented numerous precedents in support of his resolution, but I say here and now that I have examined these cases, and when properly analyzed and understood they will be found not inconsistent with the contention I make. These precedents, taken from cases which occurred during the war and which arose during the disorganized and chaotic condition for the few years following the war, are for obvious reasons not to be relied upon now. At that time no attention was paid, as we all know, to constitutional qualifications. As suggested by a member near me, it was once said by a distinguished Senator that constitutional amendments were then written with a sword; and so qualifications for members of this House were enforced in the same way.

When the life of the nation was supposed to be at stake, the House cared very little for regularity of proceedings and did not claim that it was controlled by parliamentary precedents. These precedents made during the war have all been overruled, in my judgment, since the passions of war subsided, and can not be depended upon now to sustain the contention of the gentleman from Ohio. The latter cases which have come before the House, where a similar question was raised to the one now pending, have uniformly sustained the contention which I make. They establish the sound doctrine that in all cases like the pending one the member is entitled to be sworn and given his seat. I do not depend upon my own opinion or judgment when I solemnly assert this principle and make this contention. I shall quote briefly some of the ablest and most learned gentlemen who have ever occupied seats on this floor when they were discussing cases similar to the one now pending.

The first case I cite arose in this House during the first session of the Forty-third Congress, December 2, 1873. On that day Mr. Cannon, a Delegate elected from Utah, presented himself at the bar of the House to take the oath of office as Delegate from that Territory. An objection to his doing so was made by a member—I believe Mr. Merriam, of New York. The grounds of objection were substantially the same as those now made against the member-elect from Utah. The question being raised, it was debated by several members of the House who were conspicuous for their ability and patriotism. These gentlemen had long been members of this House, and spoke for the two great parties then as now represented upon this floor.

The Delegate from Utah who presented himself with the proper credentials was a Republican, and the objection made to his being qualified and taking his seat was that he was a polygamist. How history has repeated itself, Mr. Speaker. The first gentleman that spoke upon this question was the Hon. Samuel S. Cox, of New York, and I shall quote briefly what he said. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 2, 1873, on page 7. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was a case exactly on all fours with the case now pending before the House. A Delegate from Utah presented himself to be sworn, and the objection was that he was a polygamist. He was a Republican, which is about the only difference between the two cases as I distinguish them now.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will allow me to get along; my time is fast going. I would yield if I could. Mr. Cox said:

I do not raise any moral question here.

That is our position now. He said:

I do not care anything about Mormonism; but the point is, that this gentleman has a prima facie right to the seat, and we are setting a precedent that may be dangerous. I know my friend and I should agree in regard to some practices in Utah, but I hope the House will not depart from the regular established custom and break down the prima facie certificate of the governor of the Territory. Let us stand on principle. I move that the Delegate from Utah be sworn in.

Such was the opinion of Mr. Cox, of New York, a leading Democrat, long after the passion of war had subsided and long after the alleged precedent which has been cited by the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. Cox, I have said, was a Democrat, a leading Democrat, and that was the opinion he expressed at the time. The gentleman whose seat was in controversy was a Republican. But it demonstrates, Mr. Speaker, that a Democrat can rise higher than mere party prejudices when the right of a member to his seat on this floor is affected. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, sir, other gentlemen spoke on this question. I want to read what Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts, said. I quote from his remarks on that occasion:

MR. BUTLER of Massachusetts. I desire to say to the House that I do not believe that when a man comes here with proper credentials from the proper authority it has ever been the custom of the House, or ever ought to be, that he shall not have prima facie his seat, because the moment we break away from that rule, then in high party times the House could never be organized. That is all that any of us have when we come here. While I do not mean to give any opinion or to intimate any as to the merits of this case, of which I know nothing, yet I will say that here is a case where a man holds from the governor of a Territory the proper credentials, and that Territory is entitled to be represented on this floor until something shall be shown to the House to take away that right. I trust, therefore, that my friend from New York [Mr. Merriam], who offered this resolution, will withdraw it and allow Mr. Cannon to be sworn in.

That is not all. Mr. GEORGE F. HOAR, of Massachusetts, one of the most learned men who ever occupied a seat here or in the other end of the Capitol, gave his opinion. Let me read you a sentence or two from his speech on that occasion:

MR. G. F. HOAR. This precise question came up in the last House in the case of Mr. Clark, of Texas. His credentials were referred to the Committee on Elections, and that committee reported that the only question for the House to consider was, whether Mr. Clark's credentials were regular in form, and whether the officer certifying them was entitled by the law of the State and the usages of the House to give him those credentials. Thereupon the House seated Mr. Clark, though, a few weeks after, the committee reported upon the whole case, and the House decided that Mr. Clark was not entitled to the seat he had been occupying and gave it to his competitor, Mr. Giddings.

I will read briefly now from the remarks of Mr. Potter, of New York, another distinguished Democrat and a man of conspicuous ability:

MR. POTTER. There is no question about certificates presented in this case. As appeared by the very proper inquiry of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Kellogg], this is the only certificate presented and the only pretense that anybody has to the seat. The resolution of my colleague [Mr. Merriam] goes, by way of objection to this gentleman being sworn in, upon the ground that he is guilty of certain practices contrary to the laws of the United States. Now, the difficulty with my colleague's objection is that the statute has prescribed certain qualifications for the office of Delegate from the Territory, but among those qualifications is not innocence in respect of practices to which my friend alludes.

We had that precise question in the Forty-first Congress, when a gentleman from Virginia was charged with disloyalty and other offenses; and it was agreed, almost without a dissenting voice upon this side of the House, that the House had no power to consider or determine, as a prerequisite to admission, whether or not he had been guilty of those or any other offenses, provided he came here with the constitutional requirements in reference to his qualifications, and provided also he brought prima facie evidence of a right to a seat in a certificate from the governor. Were there two certificates here, or any contest about the office, it would then be proper to refer the question to the Committee on Elections. But when there is no question as to who was elected, we can not now try or even consider the suggestion that this man was guilty of the offenses charged, because that has nothing whatever to do with his right to a seat here.

Then Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee, addressed himself to the question. He was a Republican. Unlike the last gentleman quoted, Mr. Potter, he occupied the same position politically as the gentleman whose seat was in contest. He took the same view, however, as the preceding gentlemen:

MR. MAYNARD. There is another question in connection with this case to which I desire to call attention. It is that this resolution is introduced with a preamble which asserts certain propositions to be facts. We have no evidence to that effect; we have no documents presented; the mover of the resolution has made no statement upon his own authority or otherwise, and it seems to me that it would be very rash for us to assume the truth of those statements, and to act upon them, so far as to prevent the swearing in of this Delegate.

It is in that aspect of the case that I am prevented from making the motion that I first thought of making—to refer this resolution to the Committee on Elections.

At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Niblack, a very distinguished lawyer of the State of Indiana, moved that the resolution (a resolution like that proposed by the gentleman from Ohio) be laid on the table. That motion was adopted without a division; and immediately afterwards Mr. Cannon was sworn in and took his seat.

I might add, sir, that, although Mr. Cannon was a Republican, not a member on either side of the House—no member on the Democratic side of the House—raised his voice in opposition to the position which I contend for to-day. No Democrat and no Republican objected to his being sworn in, but the resolution was laid on the table without a division, as I have suggested, and he took his seat.

That is not all. The question was again raised in the Forty-fifth Congress. At that time the House was Democratic, and the member claiming his seat was a colored man from South Carolina whose name was Rainey. Upon the right of this member to take his seat numbers of gentlemen made remarks. He came here with the proper certificate of election and his credentials were regular in form.

In behalf of his right to be sworn Mr. Banks, of Massachusetts, spoke. Mr. Banks was a distinguished Republican. He had been a Speaker and had presided over the deliberations of this House. I will quote a line or two from what Mr. Banks said on that occasion. I will not take the time to read it all. There is a good deal of sound reasoning. He says:

MR. BANKS. I submit that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Rainey] ought to be admitted to take the oath as a member of this House, because he has the certificate of his government that he has been elected according to law. There is no reason why the House should not hereafter inquire into the validity of that election. It may make such inquiry the very moment after Mr. Rainey has been admitted upon the certificate. But the very existence of our Government depends upon our recognition of the certificates of State governments to the election of members of this House. We could never organize this House if any member was permitted upon any opinion of his own to impeach the certificates of the governments under which members of this House are elected. Until the last Congress, the precedents of which have been referred to by the gentleman from Virginia, there has never been a single case where this House has set aside, as to the prima facie case, the certificate of a State government to the election of a member of Congress. In every case where the certificates have been disregarded as prima facie evidence of election it has been where the officer or officers that made the certificate have impeached their own certificate.

I will also read here what I see attributed to ex-Senator Edmunds in a Philadelphia paper:

ROBERTS SHOULD BE SEATED.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 28, 1899.

The Constitution fixes and describes the qualifications necessary for a member of the House of Representatives. I think the House has no constitutional right to add others, either affirmatively or negatively, and, therefore, I think that if Mr. Roberts was regularly elected, was of requisite age, resided in the State of Utah, and is willing to take the oath prescribed by Constitution, the House has no right to refuse to allow him to be sworn in.

It is more dangerous to the rights and liberties of the people for the House to set up standards of admission not prescribed by Constitution than to admit to be sworn any person whom the people of a State choose to elect. That done, the Constitution has itself provided for the House ridding itself of any member who, upon its own conscience, it believes for any reason ought not to continue therein.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to quote also at this point the opinion of possibly the most illustrious gentleman who ever occupied a seat upon the other side, or indeed upon either side of this House, Gen. James A. Garfield, of Ohio. [Applause.] In referring to the contested-election case of Hull against Bisbee, General Garfield said:

I will say this, the certificate was in full legal form, certifying to the legal facts which are ordinarily certified to in certificates that come here. Mr. Belford bore those credentials, and I, in common with my associates on this side of the House, said that he must be sworn in under those credentials.

He said again:

If he brought that certificate here unchallenged by any higher paper, he ought to be sworn in.

But that was not all that Mr. Garfield said. I have here a broader statement from General Garfield, which goes squarely to the point in controversy, that where the credentials of a member-elect are presented, regular in form, there is no power in the House to exclude the member-elect from his seat.

MR. CARMACK. I will ask the gentleman from what State that contest was.

MR. RICHARDSON. It was the Rogers case from the State of Arkansas; the first session of the Forty-first Congress.

MR. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, at that time submitted a resolution—that Mr. Rogers shall not be permitted to take the oath of office, or a seat as such Representative, but that his credentials shall be and are hereby referred to the Committee on Elections when appointed.

In the course of the debate General Garfield said:

I desire to ask my colleague if all that he is now reading or suggesting from that paper is not clearly matter that relates to the contest as to the ultimate right of this gentleman to his seat, and not to the prima facie right on the credentials to be sworn in as a member. It seems to me that this person has a right to be sworn in if his credentials are regular, unless there be personal objections which would prevent him from taking the oath.

After debate the member from Arkansas, Mr. Rogers, was admitted and sworn.

MR. CARMACK. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him just for a moment?

MR. RICHARDSON. Yes.

MR. CARMACK. Was it not charged in that case that he was not a citizen of the United States?

MR. RICHARDSON. I have that here, and I thank my colleague for calling attention to it, although I intended to mention it. One of the very grounds of objection to the admission of this member-elect, Mr. Rogers, was that it was alleged in the objection that he was not a citizen of the United States or of the State of Arkansas.

MR. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And that he was not of legal age, was it not?

MR. RICHARDSON. I will read what Mr. Lawrence said:

I rise to submit two reasons why Mr. Rogers, claiming to be elected, shall not be sworn into office. They are, first, that he is not a citizen of the State of Arkansas and was not a citizen of that State at the time of his election.

The very constitutional question which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] does not raise in this case, because he says he will not express an opinion upon it.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Does the Constitution require that a man be a citizen of the State in order that he be eligible as a member of Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point I want to call to the attention of the gentleman from Ohio and to the House is that, regardless of this charge, General Garfield said it was not to be considered at that time.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Precisely; there was no question of qualification in the case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman listen to what was there said? General Garfield said:

I desire to ask my colleague if all that he is now reading or suggesting from that paper is not clearly matter that relates to the contest as to the ultimate right of the gentleman to his seat—

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Precisely.

Mr. RICHARDSON (reading)— and not the prima facie right on the credentials to be sworn in? It seems to me that this person has a right to be sworn in if his credentials are regular, unless there are personal objections—and so forth.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Precisely; personal objections! [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. But there are no personal objections made.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Personal objections! [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, there were no personal objections made in that case such as Mr. Garfield referred to. The gentleman does not insinuate or mean to say that there are personal objections to this applicant and to this member-elect thereof.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Well, I do. There are personal objections.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is nothing stated in this case—

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Personal disqualifications.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They are not stated in this case, and they were not stated in the Rogers case. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. There is no analogy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the point I am endeavoring to make is that they could not be considered upon a question of the prima facie right of a member to be sworn.

The gentleman from Ohio quoted from McCrary on Elections. I have myself made an extract from that author. He says:

Where the statute gives the governor of a State the power and makes it his duty to commission the person elected to an office, the issuing of a commission by him confers a vested right upon the person commissioned, which nothing but a judicial decision can take away or authorize the governor to recall.

The certificate of the governor of Utah in the case of the member at bar gives him the right to be sworn until the case is adjudicated, and until the case is adjudicated he has the right to his seat.

Mr. Speaker, I have not cited all the cases, but only a few which have occurred subsequent to those cited by the gentleman from Ohio. They are exactly in accord with the case now at bar, each of them holding that you can not, on the prima facie right of a member to his seat, inquire into the merits of his right to that seat. I think, Mr. Speaker, I will add but little more. I believe, however, I should refer to the opinion of other gentlemen. I have quoted the distinguished gentlemen whose names I have mentioned, men like General Garfield, Senator HOAR, General Butler, Mr. Cox of New York, Mr. Maynard, and other distinguished gentlemen and experienced parliamentarians.

I have seen recently a number of interviews in the papers of this and other cities in respect to the case at bar. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I know that many interviews, or alleged interviews, can not be taken as the solemn judgment of the member who is interviewed. Oftentimes their remarks are unintentionally, of course, incorrectly set down by the intelligent reporter and sometimes exaggerated, and sometimes they are misunderstood; and therefore I do not undertake to say that any gentleman present is bound by an interview in a newspaper if he repudiates that interview. But I have here a statement made by a distinguished gentleman who is now within my vision, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. I do not know whether the gentleman gave this interview or not; and if he does not think he has been correctly reported, I am perfectly willing for him to say that he did not say it. I will read it and ask the gentleman if he did not use this language. It is a special dispatch to the Press, of Pittsburgh:

PITTSBURG, November 29, 1899.

Congressman JOHN DALZELL arrived in the city this morning from Washington. Referring to the Roberts situation, Mr. DALZELL said:

"It is the opinion of many Congressmen who have arrived at Washington that Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from Utah, will eventually be expelled from Congress. I believe that, inasmuch as there is no opponent contesting Mr. Roberts's seat, and as he has the certificate of election, he will be permitted to take his seat when Congress assembles. The case is an important one and will have immediate attention."

Now, then, that is the opinion, you see, that Mr. DALZELL held only a few days ago, unless he is misquoted by this intelligent correspondent.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, there is not a single, solitary word of truth in what the gentleman has read. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course, when the gentleman says there is not a word of truth in what the gentleman says, he means what the correspondent says.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that is an interview that was alleged to have taken place in Pittsburgh.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is right.

Mr. DALZELL. No such interview ever took place. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know whether the gentleman said it or not; but if he says he did not, I take his statement as true. But the gentleman does not state that he did not entertain the opinion ascribed to him. [Laughter.]

Then, my distinguished friend who sits just to the right of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has, since he has come to this city, given an interview—I refer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE]—in which he said: "The member-elect from Utah had as much right to be sworn as he had," or words to that effect. That is the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. STEELE. [Laughter.] If he did not say it, let him rise and say so. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEELE. I do not think the gentleman can produce any such interview.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, if the gentleman says he did not say it, and that he did not entertain such opinions, I will not produce the interview. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I quote another gentleman whom I see [laughter], and I believe the biggest gun on that side of the House—the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Laughter.] Now, I hold in my hand an alleged interview given by him. Of course, if the gentleman from Illinois says that he did not have that interview, I accept his statement; but I would like for him to add whether the opinions ascribed to him were entertained by him. [Laughter.] It is in an interview in the Washington Times, a very recent interview.

Mr. CANNON. To save time, I will say to the gentleman that there was an interview in the Washington Post that was in substance what I stated. I have no recollection—in fact I am quite sure that I had no interview with the Washington Times, and have certainly never read any.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Read it now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will read it, and then the gentleman can repudiate it if he desires.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman, however, that I took the oath and there is no allegation that I am not eligible, so that I am not on trial.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will read the interview and make it a part of my remarks.

When asked if Representative Brigham H. Roberts, of Utah, would be sworn in as a member of the House, Representative JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, who is slated for chairman of the Appropriations Committee, answered by saying, "Why not?"

Mr. CANNON regards as absurd much that has been printed in the newspapers on the Roberts case. In answer to a question asked by a reporter for the Times, Mr. CANNON said that the talk that Roberts would not be permitted to take his seat because some Representatives would object was ridiculous.

"If such a proceeding is attempted," said Mr. CANNON, "it will make the Representative who does it absurd. There seems to be little doubt, however, that a member will come to the front for that purpose on the opening day of the session."

"If, after a member has been sworn in," continued Mr. CANNON, "he can, by objecting, prevent some other member from taking the oath, why it will be seen that it would be in the power of the first few members who are sworn in to tie up the House, and make chaos of the proceedings."

"The name of Roberts was placed on the roll of the Representatives-elect by the Clerk of the House, and that act of that official puts Roberts exactly on the same footing with the other Representatives-elect so far as their right to participate in the organization of the House is concerned."

I think the interview in the Post is substantially the same as this, although I am not certain about that.

Mr. CANNON. By no manner of means. Now, as fair as my friend is, I will state that I have no recollection of such an interview. I can not conceive how I could have given it, and as he has read from that interview, which is alleged to have been with me, I trust that he will give me a sentence right at this point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Interviews are not very material, but I want now in the House of Representatives, as one of its members, to say that as to a question of election, the number of votes received, it seems to me the member is always sworn in on a proper certificate; but the question of eligibility, whether he is naturalized, whether he is under the constitutional age, or for any other reason going to his eligibility, it is quite competent, as I understand the precedents and practice, to make the objection now or hereafter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to reply briefly to the case raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], called the Whittemore case, from South Carolina, charged with selling a cadetship. That case, if I remember correctly—I have not it here—was where Whittemore was charged with selling a cadetship, and resigned to prevent expulsion and went back to his constituents. He ran again and was elected, and then came back after an election by them to the same House of Representatives. He came back with all the knowledge on the part of the members of his guilt, and he returned to an organized House of Representatives. He came here with a certificate of the governor, it is true, but he claimed to seek admission into the House of Representatives six months or longer after the House was organized. He was refused admission to the House.

Then the Winchester case was a case growing out of the war, and is not a proper case to cite here, in view of the feeling and pending conditions at that time. The only question, it seems to me, is whether or not the cases I have quoted, occurring long after the war, long after the cases cited by the gentleman from Ohio, do not in all common justice overrule those cases and give the member-elect who comes with his credentials the prima facie right to be sworn in and take part in the organization of the House and represent the State or Commonwealth which gives him the certificate. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for courteous attention. [Applause.]

I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Utah, Mr. Roberts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Utah will be heard.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the document which I now send to the Clerk's desk be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Certificate of citizenship, United States of America, Territory of Utah, ss:

Be it remembered, that on the 6th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, Brigham H. Roberts, late of England, in the Kingdom of Great Britain, at present of Centerville, in the Territory aforesaid, appeared in the first judicial district court of the United States in and for Utah Territory and applied to the said court to be admitted to become a citizen of the United States of America, pursuant to the directions and requirements of the several acts of Congress in relation thereto. And the said Brigham H. Roberts, having thereupon produced to the court such evidence, made such declaration and renunciation and taken such oaths as are by the said acts required, thereupon it was ordered by the said court that the said Brigham H. Roberts be admitted, and he was accordingly admitted by the said court, to be a citizen of the United States of America.

In testimony whereof the seal of the said court is hereunto affixed, this 6th day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two and in the year of our independence the one hundred and seventh.

[SEAL]

A. C. EMERSON, Clerk.

By the court.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In drawing seats some members were unfortunate enough to be called late and, when only a few seats were left, were compelled to take seats in front. Now, if those gentlemen who were more fortunate will take the seats they selected and thus not obscure our view—

The SPEAKER. That is a question of order, and gentlemen will please resume their seats.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the question now before the House is a most extraordinary one, and the discussion has already been remarkable. Already at the Clerk's desk the credentials of the member from Utah have been read. The question of his citizenship having been raised upon the floor of this House, I thought it proper that the prima facie evidence of that citizenship should also be read.

Now, sir, following those two documents, I wish to submit a citation from a recognized authority relative to the rules of the House in such cases, based upon its precedents for more than a hundred years. I read from McCrary's Law of Elections, chapter 4:

SEC. 204. Where two or more persons claim the same office, and where a judicial investigation is required to settle the contest upon the merits, it is often necessary to determine which of the claimants shall be permitted to qualify and to exercise the functions of the office pending such investigation. If the office were to remain vacant pending the contest it might frequently happen that the greater part of the term would expire before it could be filled, and thus the interests of the people might suffer for the want of the services of a public officer. Besides, if the mere institution of a contest was to be deemed sufficient to prevent the swearing in of the person holding the usual credentials, it is easy to see that very great and serious injustice might be done.

If this were the rule, it would only be necessary for an evil-disposed person to contest the right of his successful rival and to protract the contest as long as possible, in order to deprive the latter of his office for at least a part of the term. And this might be done by a contest having little or no merit on his side, for it would be impossible to discover, in advance of an investigation, the absence of merit. And, again, if the party holding the ordinary credentials to an office could be kept out of the office by the mere institution of a contest, the organization of a legislative body, such, for example, as the House of Representatives of the United States, might be altogether prevented by instituting contests against a majority of the members, or, what is more to be apprehended, the relative strength of political parties in such a body might be changed by instituting contests against members of one or the other of such parties. These considerations have made it necessary to adopt, and to adhere to, the rule that the person holding the ordinary credentials shall be qualified and allowed to act pending a contest and until a decision can be had on the merit.

Now, gentlemen, that is the statement of one who is learned in the law of elections, one whose book is authority in this country. And if it is the rule of the House of Representatives in cases that arise to the dignity of a contest, how infinitely more should that rule be observed when only a mere protest is made against a member who presents himself to take his oath of office?

I next proceed to the consideration of the charges that are supposed to justify what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] himself concedes to be an unusual proceeding, and which my friend on this side, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, has demonstrated to be an unprecedented proceeding. The gentleman from Ohio bases his charge upon a court record to the effect that some twelve years ago the member from Utah pleaded guilty to the charge of a misdemeanor. The gentleman seems to be oblivious to the fact that since the date of his alleged court record on this subject we have had two Presidential amnesties proclaimed that have been applied to men disqualified under the Edmunds-Tucker Act.

I understand—and gentlemen who are lawyers will certainly appreciate the force of the fact—that the presumption of law is that people keep the law. The presumption is that they are innocent until they are proven to be guilty. This remark, however, will not reach the conscience or the sense of justice of one gentleman upon this floor, and I am rather disappointed to find that the gentleman from Tennessee, in quoting interviews from the press, did not refer to that remark. I refer to a remark made by a gentleman from Iowa, who is quoted in the press of this city as saying that unless the member-elect from Utah proves his innocence, that he should vote against him!

I thought, sir, that the practice under the law, that the rule of the law itself in this country, is that one is regarded as innocent until he is proven to be guilty. But that does not seem to be the case here.

Allow me to say to the gentleman from Ohio that he has no court record to show that I was ever arraigned or condemned for any crime whatsoever since the promulgation of the amnesty proclamations of the Presidents of the United States, and hence no competent grounds for believing me guilty of any offense that disqualifies me for the office to which I was elected. The gentleman seemed also to forget the fact that since the confession to a misdemeanor, to which he has referred, there was passed in this Congress of the United States an enabling act, authorizing the people of the Territory of Utah to form a State government and that that enabling act also had a provision embodied in it that qualified all the male citizens within the limits of said Territory to participate in the election of delegates to form the new State's constitution. That enabling act was particularly framed to remove the disqualifications and disabilities which had been created by the Edmunds-Tucker law.

The gentleman seems also to forget that in addition to that fact we have had a State constitution framed; and evidently the action of the convention framing the State constitution of Utah was satisfactory to the President of the United States and his advisers, since Utah was admitted as a State into the Union upon it and has taken upon itself the responsibilities of a sovereign State, declaring under its constitution who of her citizens should exercise the elective franchise and be qualified for holding office.

All of these things have transpired, Mr. Speaker, since confession to the misdemeanor that is referred to by the gentleman from Ohio; any one of which is sufficient to remove the ineligibility charged. Were it not that I am so limited in the time allotted to me at this stage of the discussion, I should be pleased to enter into the consideration of all the questions which have been raised by the gentleman and read the specific language both of the enabling act and the State constitution of Utah, which will prove beyond question my contention on this point.

The second charge, which is supposed to go to the question of eligibility of the member from Utah, is that upon affidavit and other papers in his possession the gentleman from Ohio is convinced that ever since confession to a misdemeanor—since 1889—the applicant for his seat has been a persistent lawbreaker in the State of Utah. If that be true, let me ask why it is that the gentleman from Utah has not been punished for his lawbreaking?

Certainly there was no lack of disposition to execute the law on the part of those charged with its administration. Its administration was in the hands of non-Mormons. Its administration and all its machinery were in the hands of those who had no sympathy with men of the religious faith of the Representative from Utah. How is it, then, that he could be an open and defiant lawbreaker and yet escape the penalty of the law?

The gentleman's objection, then, is based not upon a court record, but upon affidavits and papers that have been supplied him by personal enemies of the member-elect from Utah. And now, sir, I wish to turn briefly for a moment to another branch of the crimes charged against the Representative from Utah. There is no charge that has ever been made against him constituting a felony. The only charge, even in the judgment of these people who have been seeking to encompass his expulsion from the House, goes no further than the charge of a misdemeanor—not a charge of felony.

And now, Mr. Speaker, as to the manner in which these charges are made. It has been about fifteen months since they began, since the Representative from Utah was advertised throughout this land as a defiant lawbreaker. And yet, sir, I walked the streets of Salt Lake City in open day, within easy reach of the law, and my faults lay open to the law if I were guilty of transgressing it. Other men charged with the same offense were arrested, pleaded before the courts of Utah, and were fined for the very offense alleged against the member from Utah, and yet no complaint was made against him.

No, it did not suit the purpose of those who had this present agitation in hand to vindicate the law quietly and by the usual methods. They desired particularly to have this case upon which to arouse the sentiment of the country about polygamy. Not until my business called me East did they undertake to make any charges against me. But shortly after my departure for the East they began this agitation, resulting in the present sentiment of the country now aroused against the dominant church in Utah and the State's member-elect.

I understand that the members of Congress are granted certain privileges while in attendance upon this House. It would be impossible to arrest any one of the members upon the charge of a misdemeanor. And yet you would deny me the privilege of being sworn in as a member of this House upon the allegation of some one that I am guilty of a misdemeanor. The thing for which the law itself could not lay a hand on me while in attendance upon this House you propose—that is, the coterie of men who have entered into this conspiracy propose—to crowd this question to a settlement by a majority vote, for the reason that they are fearful that if the matter should be proceeded with in the regular way, under a resolution to expel the member from Utah, they could not marshal the necessary two-thirds vote to accomplish that purpose.

I understand, sir, that these immunities are not given for the benefit of the individual members. They are given rather as a protection to his constituency, who are entitled to his services as their representative. And, therefore, I invoke the protection that is given to the constituency of a sovereign State against the proceedings that are instituted here to deprive me of the privilege of being sworn in as a member of this House. Privilege, did I say? I do not mean that. I am not asking any privilege in this House. I am not begging any favor of the members of this House. Under the shadow of the Constitution of the United States, I demand, both for myself and for the people of my State, the protection that is due to us. It is a demand that I make and not a favor that I ask. [Applause on the Democratic side and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. Order must be maintained in the House and in the galleries.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I call attention to one or two, at least, of the precedents that have been referred to by gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber. In the case of Boyd Winchester and John M. Rice, while it is conceded that the charges made against them were flimsy ones, yet those who made them were at least able to say that they made them upon the fact of an indictment against these gentlemen for high treason.

The member from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] has no indictment against me in his possession upon which to base his objections to my taking my oath of office. I take it there is a wonderful difference between objecting to a member because an indictment is in hand charging treason and an objection based upon certain affidavits of somebody or other expressing the belief that a member is guilty of a misdemeanor.

I call attention to the precedent cited by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] in the Forty-third Congress, the case of Mr. Cannon. I can add nothing to the force of that gentleman's argument except to say that in the case of Mr. Cannon the House was dealing with a Delegate from a Territory, not the Representative of the people of a sovereign State. They were dealing with a Delegate who is created by a statute passed by the Congress of the United States, and throughout the discussion it was alleged that the reason for taking exceptions to him was that they could do so because he was unprotected by the provisions of the Constitution, and yet, sir, notwithstanding he was but a Delegate, still the objection to his taking the oath was tabled and he was permitted to enjoy all the privileges of a Delegate.

It is to be remarked, sir, in this connection, and gentlemen may be astonished at it, that the course of nature was not disturbed by this action of a Republican Congress. Notwithstanding an alleged polygamist was permitted to remain upon the floor of this House, it did not transpire, as it is said to have transpired in ancient Rome a little ere the mighty Julius fell—the graves stood not tenantless. The sheeted dead did not stand and gibber in the streets of Rome. The sun was not darkened nor was the moon turned to blood. Actually, sir, the rain continued to fall upon the just and the unjust alike. [Laughter and applause.]

Gentlemen of the Democratic party, some few of whom may perhaps tremble a little at the monster petition that is to be presented to the House, pretending to voice the sentiment of the country upon the case of the member from Utah, I want to call your attention to another thing, and that is that notwithstanding a Republican Congress seated Cannon, yet the Republican party really survived its action. [Laughter.] Why, it is here to-day, and I believe, gentlemen of the majority, that it could survive even if it should seat the present Representative from the State of Utah now.

I desire now, sir, to call attention—

The SPEAKER. The thirty minutes given to the gentleman have expired.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I am sorry.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope the claimant will be given time enough to at least attempt to make some answer, if he has any, to the indictment brought against him by the people of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say for the information of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that but ten minutes of his time remains, and thirty-seven minutes of the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER].

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time remains to this side?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Roberts] be allowed to conclude his remarks, and that the time fixed for the debate be extended to that amount.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I object to that, Mr. Speaker. There was an hour and a half given to that side. They can use it as they will.

The SPEAKER. What is the pleasure of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think I only used forty-five minutes, and I gave the gentleman from Utah thirty minutes, which would leave fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee used fifty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, after consultation with gentlemen here to whom I had agreed to yield time, they now prefer not to take it and are perfectly willing to surrender that time to the gentleman from Utah, and I give him the remainder of the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah has ten minutes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I will refer briefly to the Whittemore case, from South Carolina, cited here in point. There is one thing connected with that which is not made apparent by those who have referred to it, and that is that this gentleman from South Carolina was expelled from that Congress and then afterwards returned to the same Congress, and his return was regarded as an affront upon the action of the Congress that had expelled him by a majority of two-thirds.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I refer to another matter connected with this controversy, and that is this: It is not in the indictment drawn on the floor of this House, but in the memorials and protests placed upon the desks of members yesterday. It is charged that the State of Utah has broken her compact with the Government of the United States by the election of one who is alleged to have been guilty of the misdemeanor of unlawful cohabitation. Now, sir, if the State of Utah has broken that compact by the election of a man supposed to be involved in this system of marriage that obtained in Utah, if they have broken the compact by the election of one chargeable with this offense, then, sir, they have but followed the example of the present Administration of the United States Government by ignoring the charges made against the man whom they wished to represent them.

I affirm that since the admission of Utah as a State, when men were recommended for Federal appointments, the office being within the gift of the President of the United States, to be confirmed by the Senate of the United States, objections were urged against them of the same character as those urged against the member from Utah; but the President of the United States and the Senate committees having the matter in charge ignored those protests and objections, and these men were appointed to the respective offices they sought and obtained.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you say that the present Administration, when appointing anybody—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Utah yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman if he makes the charge—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman if he makes the charge that the present Administration has appointed any Federal officer in the State of Utah that at the time of the appointment or now is practicing polygamy?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And that with the knowledge of the President? [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. My answer to the gentleman is that when men were candidates for Federal positions—

Mr. HOPKINS. This is susceptible of an answer, yes or no. It is a fact.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I object to being interrupted. I wish to answer the question in my own way. My affirmation is that when men were presented for Federal appointments, objection was made against them by affidavits presented both to the President of the United States and the appropriate committees of the Senate of the United States and that these men were appointed, notwithstanding the protest and affidavits that they were living in violation of the law.

Mr. HOPKINS. That does not answer my question. The question is as to a matter of fact. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I refuse to be further interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. So, sir, I take it that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is directly in point, and that it would be better that the entire investigation of this case be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for I tell you, sir, that making a charge against a sovereign State for breaking its compact with this Government is a very serious matter, especially since it may involve a question in regard to the action of the Executive of this nation in relation thereto; for I assert this, that if the people of Utah were guilty of breaking the compact by electing a man charged with being a violator of these particular laws about unlawful cohabitation, the Administration of the Government may also be charged with breaking that compact by also appointing men to Federal offices against whom like protests supported by affidavits were made. Therefore it is eminently proper that they should go to a committee that we will be assured are men of trained abilities and learned in the law.

One word in relation to the petition of 7,000,000 people that has been rolled up here. I say to the gentleman from Ohio that it would be exceedingly interesting to know how many of these signatures were collected in the Sunday schools.

Mr. FOX. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I decline to yield. It would be interesting to know, furthermore, how many of the signatures are repetitions, because I find this in an official letter of the National Anti-Polygamy League, sent out throughout the country, from which I read—an official letter, signed by the secretary, Grace J. Cutler. The party to whom this letter is addressed is asked to secure the signatures of 2,000 people to the anti-Roberts petition:

Get the young people to sign, too, and aid you in securing signatures. It is not necessary that only adults have representation on the petition. A few young ladies could in a very short time secure the necessary 2,000 names if you would interest them in this great moral work. No matter if your friends have signed other Roberts petitions, request them to sign again, as it is absolutely necessary to have one monster national petition large enough to make the members of Congress realize instantly the public demand that Roberts be cast out.

And yet, having collected such a petition as that, and by such methods, you come here and propose to stop a Representative of a sovereign State from taking the oath of office. Do you think that will not establish a precedent that will bring chaos some time on the floor of this House? You can not do evil that good may come.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed twenty minutes within which to conclude his remarks.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I object. I will, however, yield the gentleman ten minutes of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] yields ten minutes to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio. Since the charge that I made concerning the probable questions that may arise in connection with this question of Utah having broken the compact with the United States is questioned, and as I may have failed to make it plain because hurried by the remembrance that my time was limited, I recur to the matter again and read from a letter of one of the supreme court judges of the State of Utah, Mr. R. N. Boskin, a non-Mormon, addressed to a friend now in the city of Washington, and which I am permitted to use. I read from the original:

Both Mr. Roberts and myself were overwhelmingly elected by the same constituency and by nearly the same majority. I am not aware of a single instance of a Democratic member of the class which in former days was commonly designated Gentile having voted against Mr. Roberts, notwithstanding the charges so widely spread since his election were currently made against him in the campaign by his Republican opponents.

That the movement against Mr. Roberts is political is shown by the facts that other members of the Mormon Church against whom like charges are made continue to hold important office under the appointment of McKinley. Yet not a single word of objection to their continuance in office is heard from the Republican politicians, who in this State are most active in the effort to array public sentiment throughout the nation against seating Mr. Roberts.

One John C. Graham, the editor of the Provo Enquirer, a rank Hannaitte sheet, is postmaster at Provo City, which is among the principal cities of the State. He was appointed by McKinley. One Orson Smith is also postmaster, under an appointment by Mr. McKinley, of Logan, another principal city of the State. These gentlemen's appointment was opposed on the same grounds urged against Mr. Roberts, but the Administration evidently did not consider the objection sufficient grounds for withholding the appointment. Against both of these postmasters' informations have been filed and are pending in the district court charging them with the same offense of unlawful cohabitation as Mr. Roberts, by information, is charged with, yet no effort whatever is being made by the Republicans, who are so active against Mr. Roberts, to have Mr. McKinley depose either of these postmasters.

Mr. Speaker, much misrepresentation has taken place over what is called the Roberts case.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Utah allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I decline to be interrupted. It is charged that polygamous marriages are now going on in defiance of the laws and the compact between my State and the United States. This supreme court judge in this letter, in continuing, says:

Another of the misrepresentations made by the Republican politicians of this State to create a public sentiment against the seating of Mr. Roberts is that new polygamous marriages are being covertly formed under the sanction of the Mormon authorities. There is no foundation for such a charge. It was first made by the Salt Lake Tribune (the Republican organ) during the campaign previous to Mr. Roberts's election.

At that time I visited every part of the State, attended many political meetings, and took special pains to inquire of the reputable citizens of both parties with whom I came in contact regarding the truth of this charge, and from the information then and since obtained there is no doubt in my mind but that such marriages since Wilford Woodruff, as president of the Mormon church, issued the manifesto prohibiting polygamy, plural marriages have ceased and the masses of the Mormons understand that such marriages are no longer sanctioned by the church. While such is the case, it is true that some of the old polygamous relations are kept up, not, however, by permission or connivance of the church authorities.

The revolution regarding polygamy which has followed the Edmunds-Tucker law is much more radical and effective than at the time of the passage of said law I imagined it could possibly be. Time was fast obliterating all traces of polygamy, and it was a subject regarding which the people had almost ceased to think or talk about until this crusade was started. Polygamy is doomed in this State and can not be restored by the church, even if it desired so to do. The exceptional cases in which the old relations of polygamy are kept up are coincident which are of no more significance than the irregular sexual relations among other classes. If instead of cohabitation having been made a misdemeanor, decapitation had been made the penalty, human nature is such that there would have been exceptional violation of the law notwithstanding such a penalty might follow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I thought it proper that this statement by this reliable man should be made here for the purpose of meeting the accusation so recklessly made. I deny that the State of Utah has broken her compact or has any intention or desire to break the compact with the United States. In asking for my political rights upon the floor of this House I do not champion the cause of polygamy. There is no occasion for championing that cause.

It is a question that is settled, and, sir, I hold it an honor that in the annals of the State of Utah I will be known as one who assisted in bringing about the settlement of that question upon the floor of the constitutional convention of that State. I am not here to represent polygamy, I am not here to advocate it, I am not here to ask a repeal of the provision in the constitution of my State which places that practice now under the ban of constitutional provision as well as under statutory law. I thank the gentleman from Ohio, as well as the members of this House, for their indulgence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield now three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE].

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear to all that I could say nothing to throw any light on the legal aspect of this question in the short time allotted to me. I shall not, therefore, undertake to discuss the question at length. I confess, frankly, that I occupy the floor for the sole purpose of making my own position and my vote thoroughly understood by the country and by my constituents.

I regret, sir, exceedingly that it did not so happen that the majority in the House should have adopted another procedure in connection with the disposition of the pending question. I may be permitted to say that it was in the air. I have no authority, of course, for speaking for the majority and do not undertake to do so, nor do I undertake to question their action or have anything whatever to say with reference to their caucus, but it was in the air that there was some doubt as to the proper method of procedure in dealing with this case, whether to object to the member from Utah taking the oath of office or to permit him to do so and then to move for his expulsion. But the majority have pursued the course which seemed fit and proper to them, and I have no question to make about it.

Mr. Speaker, I can not vote for the pending resolution. Much as I sympathize with the general purpose it has in view, I can not vote for it for reasons which I wish briefly to state. My own constituents are in full sympathy with the purposes sought to be accomplished here, and if the question arose on a proposition after the swearing in of a member on evidence disclosing the fact that the charges made against him by a member of the House are true I should not have hesitated to cast my vote for his expulsion, because I think if the facts alleged are as stated he would not be fit and would not be allowed to be a member of this body.

I, Mr. Speaker, with my constituents, believe in preserving the purity and the virtue of American homes. We regard with abhorrence the possibility of any man sitting in this body who is a notorious public adulterer, who flagrantly lives in illegal cohabitation with a plurality of women. But in view of the fact that the Constitution of the United States prescribes the conditions of eligibility, namely, that the candidate must be 25 years of age, must be seven years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen, which are the only conditions prescribed that make him eligible, I do not feel that I can go behind them and vote for the adoption of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

I do not believe we have a right to do so, and thereby deny to a sovereign State her representation for a moment, without a fair trial and investigation. My position conforms strictly with the precedents of the House—with every precedent deserving of consideration—and conforms with the opinions of the most learned statesmen and legislators who have occupied seats on both sides of this Chamber. It conforms, as I am told—I can not speak authoritatively—with the opinion of the illustrious counsel employed by the League for the prosecution of this case—two distinguished lawyers, one a Republican and one a Democrat, Mr. Edmunds and Mr. Carlisle, both of whom insist that the proper method is by expulsion and not by the adoption of the course proposed here—that the House has not the power when a member-elect comes with a certificate of election from the proper source, uncontested, to refuse to administer the oath of office.

Mr. Speaker, when I took the oath of office as a member of this House I swore to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. As I have already stated, the Constitution prescribes only three conditions of eligibility—namely, that the member-elect shall be 25 years of age, seven years a citizen of the United States, and shall be an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen. It may be that he is morally unfit to be a member of this House, but no one, not even the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], challenges the member from Utah on either of these grounds.

From hearsay evidence, and even from public statements purporting to be made by the member himself, I believe him to be an adulterer and that he lives and has lived in illegal cohabitation with more than one woman; and if this be true, he is unfit to sit in this House. But shall he be adjudged without trial? Shall we accept rumor in his condemnation? To what end? If the charges are true, may we not expel him, and immediately after the House begins the business of the session? Is it not better to do this than to subvert every precedent of the House deserving of respect and to entail upon ourselves the danger of precedents that may arise in the future to vex and harass us when questions of graver import than the one under consideration shall arise?

The people have asked us not to do violence to the time-honored course adopted in proceedings in this House by refusing the defendant the privilege of being sworn in as a member and depriving his State of the privilege of participating in the organization of the House; they have asked us, if the proof shows the man guilty, that we expel him from membership. This I am ready to do, not only in obedience to their behest, but in response to my own love of the purity of the domestic fireside.

How much greater the moral effect if we proceed in a way which will command almost if not entire unanimous vote of the House. Why inject into the consideration of the subject questions of doubt that force members to vote against the pending resolution, when we could proceed by unanimous agreement and in the result of our deliberation impress society with tenfold more of weight and influence? It is a foregone conclusion that this man can not sit in this body. It is a mere question of whether he shall be ejected in a legal, well-recognized, constitutional way or whether he shall be deprived, and his State deprived, of legal guaranties which have hitherto been accorded to every man coming with credentials such as his.

I should be glad to join with the majority in expulsion if the evidence, as I believe it would, should justify such action in placing the condemnation of the House upon conduct such as shocks every precept of virtue and principle of morality. I regret exceedingly that the majority, from some motive unknown to me, has adopted a course rendering it impossible for some of us to join with them in their vote.

Mr. Speaker, I am more than usually impelled to recognize constitutional and legal restrictions and observances at this time, when we are confronted on every hand by a disposition on the part of many to treat the Constitution with contempt and to deride the conservative principles by which our country has acquired its greatness and our people their happiness.

I would refer yet once more to the demand made upon us by the people in this country in their petitions not to refuse Mr. Roberts the privilege of being sworn in, but to eject him for immorality, as we have a right to do after he is sworn in; and to this they were advised by the ablest and most capable of counsel representing the petitioners against him. Even these petitions confess that this position is the correct one. I print in the RECORD a copy of one of the petitions. They read as follows:

FORM OF PETITION.

To the Honorable ———, Representative-elect of the ——— Congressional district of the State of ——— to the Fifty-sixth Congress of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned, legally qualified voters of the said ——— Congressional district of the said State of ———, do hereby most respectfully and most earnestly call upon you as our Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress to use your utmost endeavor and to exhaust all honorable means to secure the prompt expulsion of Mr. B. H. Roberts, of Utah, the avowed polygamist and covenant breaker, from the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provision of the National Constitution in Article I, section 5, paragraph 2, which reads as follows: "Each House (of Congress) may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a member."

We also do most respectfully and most earnestly call upon you to use your utmost endeavor and to exhaust all honorable means to secure action by the Fifty-sixth Congress proposing an amendment to the National Constitution, and submitting the same to the legislatures of the several States, defining legal marriage to be monogamic, and making polygamy, under whatever guise or pretense, a crime against the United States, punishable by severe penalties, including disfranchisement and disqualification to vote or to hold any office of honor or emolument under the United States or any State or Territory therein.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DINSMORE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with the views which have been expressed upon this question by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, the leader of the Democratic minority.

I am glad that in his statement he asserted that he spoke for himself and not as the representative of the Democratic party.

This is not and can not be made a party question.

The present question before this House is one of the most important that ever faced this body since its beginning. On its proper settlement depends the integrity of the country.

The gentleman from Utah who has just taken his seat has not denied that he is practicing polygamy to-day. In face of this fact I can not see a single reason why he should be permitted to take the oath. He seems to question the fact that the enormous petition containing 7,000,000 names, which has been presented to this House remonstrating against his being seated, is authentic, and quotes the fact that girls and boys in Sunday schools gave their signatures to this document.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that nearly every person in my own State, and every State in the Union, would have signed this petition had it been presented to them.

Who should be more alive to the dangers of Mormonism and polygamy than the children in the Sunday schools, who are taught to condemn the practices taught by the people who profess these beliefs?

Polygamy is nothing else, in my judgment, than pure animalism. Mormonism had nothing of polygamy in it in the first years of its existence.

Polygamy and divorce are twin evils in this country to-day. When one considers the fact that in this country, which we pride ourselves on being the greatest in the world, that in certain portions of it a man can take as many wives as he wishes and be exempt from punishment, and that in other portions a man and wife, for the slightest cause, or no cause at all, as soon as he or she becomes tired of the other, can secure a divorce, it is time to stop and consider.

Our marriage and divorce laws should be placed upon a solid foundation and should harmonize with the Christian and moral sentiment of the country.

The true idea of the home is where one wife, and one wife only, reigns as the queen of the home.

I do not oppose Mr. Roberts on account of his religious views. Mr. King, who served so ably in the last House, was a Mormon. It is on account of his practices, which are a standing disgrace to American civilization and common decency as regarded by practically the entire American people.

Part of the penalty for living with plural wives, as prescribed by the Edmunds law of 1882 and reaffirmed by the Edmunds-Tucker law of 1887, is disqualification to vote or to hold office as an American citizen. Mr. Roberts admittedly lived with plural wives since 1890, and his election seems to me to be a challenge to the American people.

Mormonism is seeking a hold in every State in the Union. Missionaries are now at work in my own State. It threatens our liberties and is a menace to our homes. It is a vital blow at the purity of womanhood and the sanctity of the home. If Mr. Roberts should be admitted, polygamy would receive new impetus. Glory of country lies in the purity of American womanhood and sacredness of home.

I do not think Congress can afford even for a minute to clothe this man with the lawmaking power who is himself a lawbreaker.

Mormonism is the curse of this country to-day. It is nothing else than legalized licentiousness and corruption. Every wife, every mother, every daughter in the land is waiting the action of this House to-day. Old couples by the thousands who have wandered up and down the pathway of life for scores of years, happy in the comfort of their own virtuous homes and each other's company, watch with anxious eye the action of the American Congress.

America's future rests upon the preservation of the sanctity of the home. The world is one continuous struggle for existence—man contending against man for supremacy. The hearthstone and the fireside are the only sure resting places and harbors of refuge.

Who in this vast assemblage of men gathered from all parts of the country wishes to go to his home and spend it with his family at the Christmas fireside and explain how it happens that in this enlightened Republic any man can sit, even for a minute, in the greatest lawmaking body in the land, who practices polygamy?

Where army and navy fail the home triumphs. Every house chimney is a monument of the integrity and virtue of the citizen. If the home prospers the country can not but succeed. If the home is invaded by lust, sensuality, and dishonor, God save the Republic.

Numerous precedents have been shown where the House of Representatives has refused in other cases to administer the oath while charges were pending.

The present circumstances justify more than any other instance in the history of this body the refusal of the oath to Mr. Roberts, and I propose, as a friend of American homes, American honor, and American womanhood, to give my vote to the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Ohio. [Loud applause on the Republican side and in the galleries.]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling that the statement made by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Roberts] shall go to the country to-night unchallenged. I will not challenge the truth of the statement as he made it, but I will point out what a miserable subterfuge he has attempted to practice here. He said, in the first place, before the extension of time, that there had been propositions to appoint certain gentlemen to Federal offices in the State of Utah, and that protests were sent to the President and to the Senate advising them of the fact that these gentlemen were guilty of the same offenses with which he stands charged, and that the President and the Senate brushed aside those charges and appointed the individuals.

A moment of delay and a respite of thought, I hope, led the gentleman to change somewhat his statement, and then he said, and that is the whole of his statement at this time, that against the applicant for the post-office at Provo and against the applicant for an office somewhere else there were statements forwarded here, and affidavits were filed; and there he stopped, excepting to say that they were afterwards appointed.

Does the gentleman suppose that he is dealing with some country justice of the peace somewhere in the back townships of Utah when he makes a statement like that and asks that it shall have some weight in the American Congress and before the American people? If the gentleman wants to state anything, let him state this: Let him state upon his own responsibility that these men were guilty of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation, and that those facts came undisputed to the President and to the Senate, and then he has got a case; but when he stops short of that he finds himself simply appealing to a hope here to create a diversion from himself.

Mr. HOPKINS. He declined to make that statement in answer to my question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That he declined to do, and refused to be interrupted, notwithstanding that he had, through himself and friends, begged for the time which he was using, and was using the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] to make these slanders against the President.

Mr. Roberts of Utah rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] yield to his colleague?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I deny that it can be shown that the President of the United States knowingly appointed a polygamist to office. [Applause.] I deny it. [Turning to Mr. Roberts of Utah.] You might as well tell the people of the United States that that husband of one wife, that exemplary citizen of this country, had stained his hands in human blood, as to say that he knowingly appointed a man to office who was guilty of the crime which you yourself are charged with and will not deny.

[Applause on the Republican side and in the galleries.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] yield half a minute?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield half a minute to the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. One minute.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The gentleman can have it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for one minute.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. Then, Mr. Speaker, my charge was intended to be in the second case as it was stated by the gentleman in the first, namely, that the statements or affidavits charging these men with the same crimes alleged against me were filed both before the President and before the Senate committees, and, notwithstanding those affidavits asserting that these men were guilty of these crimes, they were appointed.

Mr. MINOR. Were they really guilty?

Mr. DALZELL. Were they guilty? That is the question.

Mr. ROBERTS of Utah. I can not say that, sir. It does not appear that the member from Utah is guilty. He is only charged.

Mr. BROSIUS. Why, sir, he does not deny it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I have no time to yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only wanted to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Will the Chair kindly inform me how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seventeen minutes remaining.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the argument of the member-elect from Utah, he exhibited a large incapacity to comprehend the nature of my position and the nature of his position here, and also the spirit of the American people. I am not here asserting that the member-elect from Utah is guilty of any crime; but I indict him upon my responsibility as a member of this House upon the basis of information placed in my hands; I charge him in that sense with this offense, and it is not for the House at this moment to inquire whether those charges be true or false, but only are they made with the solemnity that should lie at the bottom of a charge made under these circumstances at this hour and in this House.

Our friends upon the other side of the House—and I may justly use that term now, "the other side of the House"—are here to-day worshipping as they have ever worshiped under other forms and for other purposes the fetich of a certificate. All sins are covered for them by the certificate of a sovereign State, and no right exists in Congress to make him pause—he comes with a certificate. If the King of the Cannibal Islands, panopied with his club and with his feathers, marched down the aisle with a certificate of the governor of Tennessee, we must stand here appalled by the spectacle, and say, "Mr. Speaker, swear him in." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already declined to yield, and so stated to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I have no time to yield now.

Mr. FOX. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has stated that he will not be interrupted, and so said to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FOX. I just wanted to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. If a boy 10 years old walked down the aisle presenting a certificate as a member-elect from a district in the State of Arkansas, my friend from Arkansas who has just spoken would say, "The absurdity of this certificate is manifest, but we must swear him in." If Li Hung Chang should march down this aisle with a certificate, that certificate must be respected. There is no want of power, there is no absence of propriety in the House ever stopping any man with any certificate for any purpose if it so wills; and always is it its duty, and almost always has it held it to be its duty and its right to pause, to stop at the threshold one whose ineligibility is charged.

Now, my friend from Tennessee told us about the Cannon case. I am grateful for the reference. He quoted from the argument of Mr. Potter and of Mr. HOAR and of Mr. Maynard. I want to say just this about that discussion: That was a discussion which came on and was conducted not to exceed ten or fifteen minutes, and for one column of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD it contains more inaccurate accounts of what had occurred at other times than any similar statement and page in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Let me give you a brief account of that episode.

The first session of the Forty-third Congress was on the 1st of December, 1873. The Delegates were not called upon to be sworn in until after the complete organization of the House.

Mr. Maynard suggested that the Delegates be sworn in.

Mr. Merriam said:

Before the Delegate from Utah is sworn in I have a resolution which I desire to offer.

The Speaker then directed the Delegate from Utah to stand aside until those who were not objected to should be sworn in. When the other Delegates were sworn in Mr. Merriam offered the following preamble and resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas it is alleged that George Q. Cannon, of Utah, has taken oaths inconsistent with the citizenship of the United States and with his obligations as Delegate in this House, and has been, and continues to be, guilty of practices in violation and defiance of the laws of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the credentials of said Cannon and his right to a seat in this House as a Delegate from Utah be referred to the Committee on Elections, and that said Cannon be not admitted to a seat in this House previous to a report from said committee.

It will be noted that at this time there was no law declaring ineligible a person guilty of polygamous practices.

A short discussion followed, participated in by Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, Mr. G. F. HOAR, Mr. Clarkson N. Potter, and Mr. Maynard.

Mr. Cox took the position that Mr. Cannon had the prima facie right to his seat.

Mr. Butler said:

I do not believe that when a man comes here with proper credentials from the proper authority it has ever been the custom of the House, or ever ought to be, that he shall not have prima facie right to his seat, because the moment we break away from that rule, then in high party times the House could never be organized.

If Mr. Butler meant by this the situation where the legal or constitutional qualifications of the claimant were not questioned, he was probably right. But if he meant by that that in every case the credentials exhibited not only his election, but his qualifications, and that he was entitled to his seat, then he had not only forgotten very recent precedents in the House, but also his own position, especially the position he took in the Connor case, to which I have just referred.

Mr. HOAR said:

This precise case came up in the last House in the case of Mr. Clark, of Texas. His credentials were referred to the Committee on Elections, and that committee reported that the only question for the House to consider was whether Mr. Clark's credentials were regular in form and whether the officer certifying them was entitled by the law of the State and usages of the House to give him those credentials.

Mr. HOAR's parallel is a very unhappy one. Clark's certificate was in perfect form; there was no question of ineligibility or personal disqualification. It is a question solely of election and returns.

Mr. Potter said:

There is no question about certificates presented in this case. The resolution of my colleague goes, by way of objection to this gentleman being sworn in, upon the ground that he is guilty of certain practices contrary to the laws of the United States.

Now, the difficulty with my colleague's objection is that the statute has prescribed certain qualifications for the office of Delegate from that Territory, but among those qualifications is not innocence in respect to practices to which my friend alludes.

We had that precise question in the Forty-first Congress, when a gentleman from Virginia was charged with disloyalty and other offenses, and it was agreed, almost without a dissenting voice upon this side of the House, that this House had no voice to consider or determine, as a prerequisite to admission, whether or not he had been guilty of those or any other offenses, provided he came here with the constitutional requirements in reference to his qualifications.

So we find Mr. Potter admitting that want of constitutional qualifications will bar a man at the threshold, and surely a valid legal disqualification will do the same.

But Mr. Potter's reference to the Virginia case was no happier than Mr. HOAR's in the Texas case.

In the Virginia case referred to the House refused to permit the swearing in of members objected to on the ground of disloyalty until the charge had been examined either by the House or the Committee on Elections.

Mr. Maynard said:

There is another question in connection with this case to which I desire to call attention; it is that this resolution is introduced with a preamble which asserts certain propositions to be facts. We have no evidence to that effect; we have no documents presented. The mover of the resolution has made no statement upon his own authority or otherwise, and it seems to me that it would be very rash for us to assume the truth of those statements, and to act upon them so far as to prevent the swearing in of this Delegate. It is from that aspect of the case that I am prevented from making the motion that I first thought of making—to refer the resolution to the Committee on Elections.

I think it very unsafe to adopt a resolution or any other proceeding in this House reflecting upon a member of the House unless we first have some ground laid, either by documentary evidence introduced or by statements made by the gentleman who introduced the proposition upon his own authority and responsibility.

The House discussed the question and tried it out. So, properly, Mr. Merriam's resolution was laid on the table.

At the time when that objection was made to Mr. Cannon, of Utah, the Edmunds law was in the womb of the future. There was no statutory disqualification, and Mr. Cannon came only as a Delegate. But later on, Mr. Speaker, George Q. Cannon, of Utah, came to the bar of this House. He did not chance to hold a certificate, although he ought to have had a certificate; but if he had come to the bar of the House, he would have been stopped there and, as I gather from the sentiments of that Congress, he would have been held there and not permitted to take the oath, for when the case came up for consideration in his contest against Campbell, in the following May, only six weeks after the Edmunds law was passed, George Q. Cannon, with an incontestable right to a seat as a Delegate on the floor of this House, save that he was a polygamist, was denied a seat because of his polygamy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There was no ground, claim, or pretense of right to keep him out save that he was a polygamist. Mr. Speaker, we talk about letting this man in and then, perchance, putting him out. I take the liberty to repeat what was repeated before on the floor of this House on a similar occasion, the lines put into the mouth of Colonel Titus, who, more than two hundred years ago, when Charles II was battering at the doors of Parliament and the liberties of the people, demanding entrance, is reported as saying:

I hear a lion in the lobby roar;
Say, Mr. Speaker, shall we shut the door
And keep him there, or shall we let him in
To try if we can put him out again?

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the substitute be again read.

The substitute was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the original resolution be read.

The original resolution was again read.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] to add to his resolution the words— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. LENTZ. Then I offer this as an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. To the original resolution?

Mr. LENTZ. To the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is charged that Brigham H. Roberts, a Representative-elect to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, is ineligible to a seat in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas such charge is made through a member of this House, on his responsibility as such member and on the basis, as he asserts, of public records, affidavits, and papers evidencing such ineligibility; and

Whereas it is charged and generally believed that John C. Graham, postmaster at Provo City, Utah, a Presidential appointee, is ineligible—

The SPEAKER (interrupting the reading). The Clerk will suspend. This is clearly not an amendment, but a substitute. The Chair rules it out of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the resolution and the substitute.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee as a substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON) there were—ayes 59, noes 247.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the adoption of the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER].

Mr. DALZELL, Mr. GROSVENOR, and several others. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 304, nays 32, not voting 18; as follows:

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin, has been called home on account of the dangerous illness of a brother. If present, he would have voted for the resolution.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the preamble will be considered as having been agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following committee in accordance with the vote just taken:

Special committee: Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, Mr. LANDIS of Indiana, Mr. MORRIS of Minnesota, Mr. FREER of West Virginia, Mr. LITTLEFIELD of Maine, Mr. MCPHERSON of Iowa, Mr. DE ARMOND of Missouri, Mr. LANHAM of Texas, Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin, on account of dangerous illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. EVAN E. SETTLE.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Congressional delegation from Kentucky, I desire to announce the death of our late colleague, Hon. EVAN E. SETTLE, a Representative from the Seventh district of the State of Kentucky in the Fifty-sixth Congress. At a later period in the session it is the purpose of the members from that State to request that a day be set apart to enable those members who desire to do so to pay special tribute to and pronounce eulogies upon the life of our deceased friend.

For the present I desire to ask the adoption of the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the House of Representatives learns with profound sorrow and regret of the death of Hon. EVAN E. SETTLE, late a Representative from the Seventh district of Kentucky in the Fifty-sixth Congress, at his home in Owenton, on Thursday, November 16, 1899.

Be it further resolved, That as a further mark of respect to Mr. SETTLE the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to; and accordingly, in pursuance thereof, the House (at 6 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Thursday next at 12 o'clock m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, praying that that Territory be admitted into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Charles H. Akers, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of the house memorial No. 2 of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, praying for statehood, which was filed in this office the 11th day of March, A. D. 1899, at 4 o'clock p. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 11th day of March, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES H. AKERS,
Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

House memorial No. 2.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the twentieth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona in session, respectfully beg leave to re-present to your honorable bodies:

That Arizona has been in Territorial vassalage for nearly thirty-five years; that it has the wealth, the population, and that the population has the intelligence requisite to self-government; that the people of this Territory without regard to political affiliation or association are in favor of early admission to statehood, and your memorialists earnestly pray that Arizona be speedily admitted to statehood.

That the secretary of the Territory is hereby directed to forward a copy of this memorial, one to the honorable President of the Senate, one to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and one to our Delegate in Congress.

E. M. WILLIAMS,
Speaker of the House pro tempore.
MORRIS GOLDWATER,
President of the Council.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the per diem of legislators in that Territory from $4 to $8; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Charles H. Akers, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of the House memorial No. 6, of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, asking for increase per diem of legislators from $4 to $8, which was filed in this office the 11th day of March, A. D. 1899, at 4 o'clock p. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 11th day of March, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES H. AKERS,
Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

House memorial No. 6.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled: Your memorialist, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, most respectfully represent that—

Since June 19, 1878, the date at which the compensation of members of the legislative assembly of this Territory was fixed at $4 per day, the population and business of the Territory have doubled many times, and the legislative business of the Territory has so increased, and the work of the legislators has also so much increased and the need for legislation so enlarged that it has become absolutely burdensome to members to do the legislative work and defray their expenses meantime as the same is demanded; that those who accept the position to serve as a member of that body do it at a loss, and in consequence thereof it has become hard to induce people to accept the position. Therefore, for future legislation in this Territory, your memorialists would most respectfully ask your honorable body to raise the per diem of legislators in this Territory from $4 to $8, as the necessity now so demands; and in duty bound your memorialists will ever be to you etc.

That the Secretary of the Territory is hereby directed to forward a copy of this memorial, one to honorable President of the Senate, one to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and one to our Delegate in Congress.

E. H. WILLIAMS,
Speaker of the House pro tempore.
MORRIS GOLDWATER,
President of the Council.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, praying that an appropriation of $25,000 be made annually for the establishment of a school of mines situate at Socorro in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.
CERTIFICATE.

I, George H. Wallace, secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, do hereby certify that there was filed for record in this office, at — o'clock — m., on the 16th day of March, A. D. 1899, council joint memorial No. 6 of the Thirty-third legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, and also that I have compared the following copy of the same with the original thereof now on file and declare it to be a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal this 17th day of May, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.]

GEO. H. WALLACE,
Secretary of New Mexico.

Council joint memorial No. 6.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas the mining and mineral resources of the Territory of New Mexico have not heretofore received the attention which they should have received, for the want of sufficient funds for the proper scientific investigation of the same; and

Whereas the Territory of New Mexico has a well-established school of mines, with proper buildings and appliances, situate at the city of Socorro, in said Territory: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico:

SECTION 1. That Congress is hereby memorialized to appropriate and set aside the sum of $25,000 annually, to be expended under and by direction of the said New Mexico School of Mines, in scientific research, investigation, and development of all the mining resources of whatsoever kind within the Territory of New Mexico; and that said sum of $25,000 be so set aside and appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the board of trustees of said school of mines, in connection with any and all appropriations made for similar purposes, to said school of mines, by the Territory of New Mexico.

SEC. 2. That the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico is hereby directed to transmit authenticated copies of this memorial to the Secretary of the Interior, to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved this 16th day of March, A. D. 1899.

MIGUEL A. OTERO,
Governor of the Territory of New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, praying that an appropriation be made for continuing the work of ascertaining the depth of bed rock at a place on the Gila River known as the Buttes, in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Charles H. Akers, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of the memorial No. 7 of the twentieth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona to the Congress of the United States, which was filed in this office the 13th day of March, A. D. 1899, at 3 o'clock p. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 13th day of March, A. D. 1899.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES H. AKERS,
Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

No. 7.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the twentieth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent—

That your memorialist greatly appreciate the action of your honorable body in appropriating the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to ascertain the depth of bed rock at a place on the Gila River in Arizona known as the Buttes, and to ascertain the feasibility and ascertaining in detail the cost of the construction of a dam across the river at that point as prayed for by a memorial of the nineteenth legislative assembly of this Territory.

Your memorialist further represents that work under that appropriation (Fifty-fifth Congress, section 2, chapter 545) is now in active progress, and that the results therefrom are of the most satisfactory and gratifying character.

That for the purpose of continuing such work, your memorialist prays that your honorable body will make all necessary appropriations.

Your memorialist respectfully refers your honorable body to the memorial of the nineteenth session of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, to Senate Document No. 27, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, and to the reports of those having charge of the work now in progress.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Territory be, and is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to our Delegate in Congress, and also a copy each to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
Speaker of the House.
MORRIS GOLDWATER,
President of the Council.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to give to Congress concurrent jurisdiction with the several States for the suppression of trusts and other combinations to control production, stifle competition, and to regulate for their own benefit the price of products and the wages of labor; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the city of El Reno, in that Territory, certain lands to be used by the people of Canadian County as a public burial ground; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of the Deutscher Turn Verein of Grand Rapids, Mich.; of the Aurora Turn Verein of Chicago, Ill., and of the Harlem Turn Verein of New York, remonstrating against the continuance of the war in the Philippines; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Encampment No. 1, Union Veteran Legion, of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to control or abolish trusts and combinations; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the congregation of the Central Presbyterian Church of Lebanon, Ohio, expressing their abhorrence of war and praying for the enactment of legislation making war impossible; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the memorial of J. Edward Buckley, acting United States vice-consul-general, of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the unpardonable wrongs committed against American citizens in a foreign country; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Salina, Beaver, Salt Lake City, Ephraim, Richfield, Logan, Mendon, Provo, Spanish Fork, Springville, Murray, and Salem, all in the State of Utah, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petitions of Rev. S. H. Beale and 12 other citizens of Camden; of Rev. A. K. Bryant and 80 other citizens of Sanford; of Rev. Henry M. Perkins and 34 other citizens of Union; of John R. Clifford and 75 other citizens of Woodford, and of A. L. Struthers and 47 other citizens of South Gardiner, all in the State of Maine, and of the General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Michigan, relative to the treatment of the Finnish people by the Russian Government; which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

MICHIGAN, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, LANSING.

I, Justus S. Stearns, secretary of state of the State of Michigan, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of a concurrent resolution of the legislature of 1899 is a true and correct transcript of the original, which is on file in the department of state.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Michigan, at Lansing, this 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1899.

[SEAL.]

J. S. STEARNS, Secretary of State.

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the American people remain unalterably and uncompromisingly opposed to all forms of oppression and political usurpation; and most profound sympathy for every people of whatever race, nationality, or creed, in their efforts to secure and preserve self-government and to maintain inviolate all their civil, political, and religious liberties; and

Whereas upon the conquest of Finland by Russia in 1809, in the "act of assurance," Alexander I most solemnly and sacredly promised "to conform and ratify the religion and fundamental laws of the country (Finland), together with the privileges and rights according to the constitution" and "to rule this honest people according to their laws and to the inviolable order of eternal justice;" and as solemnly and sacredly pledged himself and his successors to preserve to the people of Finland the full measure of autonomy and local self-government then enjoyed; and furthermore at each succeeding coronation, Nicholas I, Alexander II, Alexander III, and the present Nicholas II, upon taking the title of Grand Duke of Finland, have respectively ratified and reaffirmed in every particular the said act of assurance; and

Whereas under the union consummated by the act of assurance the prosperity and advancement of the Finnish people in material well-being and civilization, with its accompanying sciences, arts, and moral culture, has not only surpassed that of any other portion of the Russian Empire, but has been the wonder, the marvel, and the admiration of the civilized world; and

Whereas within a few months from the date on which Czar Nicholas II promulgated to the world the now famous peace message, the Russian Government, by a special ukase, abrogated the act of assurance, abolished the Finnish constitution, and destroyed the autonomy of the Grand Duchy of Finland, and now proposes to extend the term of military service and to increase the quota of Finnish conscript for the standing army fourfold and proportionately augment the Finnish military budget: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That we express our profound and heartfelt sympathy for the down-trodden people of Finland in their present hour of darkest trouble, and with admiration approve their efforts to preserve to themselves and to their posterity inviolate and undiminished their hereditary and fundamental rights and privileges—the proud heritage of seven centuries of progressive development; and be it further

Resolved, That in view of the fact that the whole purpose and tenor of the ukase and proposed legislation for Finland respecting military affairs is incompatible and irreconcilable with the professed purpose and spirit of the peace conference to be held at The Hague, we respectfully but urgently request President McKinley to instruct our commissioners to the peace conference to express, in case the opportunity presents itself, the disapproval of the people of the United States of the policy of the Russian Government in its present administration of civil and military affairs in Finland; and be it further

Resolved, That we respectfully but earnestly and urgently request President McKinley, through our duly accredited representative at the Court of St. Petersburg, if not inconsistent with public interest, to express to the Government of the Czar the serious concern of the Government of the United States because of the abrogation of the act of assurance of Alexander I, sacredly ratified and reaffirmed by each of his successors, the abolition of the ancient Finnish constitution, and the consequent destruction of Finnish autonomy; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to transmit a certified copy of these resolutions to President McKinley and our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

ORRIN W. ROBINSON,
President of the Senate.
E. J. ADAMS,
Speaker of the House.

Approved June 7, 1899.

H. S. PINGREE, Governor.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the city council of Traverse City, Mich., praying that an appropriation be made providing for the erection of a breakwater at that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Wallace and 20 other citizens of Lafayette, George W. Bass and 30 other citizens of Mooresville, E. R. Brown and 147 other citizens of Monticello, Edward Campbell and 41 other citizens of Ossian, and of the Methodist Ministerial Association of Indianapolis, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FOSTER presented a petition of the legislature of Washington, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Upper Columbia River; which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

House memorial No. 9.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the house of representatives and the senate of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent:

Whereas the question of transportation of cereals and other products of the farm, mines, and pastoral pursuits and fruit culture of all that section of our State in the north central portion thereof east of the Cascade range is of very great importance; and

Whereas the Columbia River can be made navigable for more than 100 miles by the expenditure of a small amount of money at Priest Rock Island, Orondo, and Methon Rapids; and

Whereas a great demand exists for the improvement of said river at said places: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That your memorialists most respectfully and earnestly urge that your honorable bodies favor such legislation as will hasten the opening of said river to navigation by removing natural obstructions at said rapids, which will greatly aid transportation of persons and products in a territory three times as large as the State of Connecticut.

Resolved further, That your memorialists request of our Senators and Representatives in the national Senate and House of Representatives to press this matter before our National Legislature, and urge upon it the necessity of immediate legislation that will afford the long-prayed-for relief sought, and that a copy of this memorial be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

And this your memorialists ever pray.

Passed the house February 25, 1899.

E. HEISTER GULL,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the senate March 3, 1899.

THURSTON DANIELS,
President of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, STATE OF IDAHO.
I, M. Patrie, secretary of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 1, by Watta, memorializing Congress to pass and enact as a law the bill introduced into the Senate by United States Senator WOLCOTT, Colorado, providing for the creation of another judicial circuit, to be known as the Tenth circuit, such new court established to have jurisdiction in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana.

Which was filed in this office the 28th day of February, A. D. 1899, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 4th day of March, A. D. 1899.

M. PATRIE, Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial No. 7, by Watts, memorializing Congress to pass and enact as a law the bill introduced into the Senate of the United States by United States Senator WOLCOTT, Colorado, providing for the creation of another judicial circuit, to be known as the Tenth circuit, such new court established to have jurisdiction in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the governor and the legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent—

That some time ago United States Senator WOLCOTT, Colorado, introduced in the Senate of the United States a bill for an act establishing another judicial circuit of the United States, to be known as the Tenth circuit, and to have jurisdiction in and over the States of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana.

That the bill is of great importance to the State of Idaho.

That the people of Idaho who have business in the circuit court of the United States in order to be heard must travel to San Francisco, a distance of about 1,300 miles, and then be subject to indefinite delays because of the crowded state of business in the ninth circuit.

That the distance to be traveled by counsel at present to appear before the circuit court of appeals is so great and the expense is so enormous that litigants of limited means in many cases would better suffer injustice and defeat rather than pursue their litigation in that court.

That the ninth circuit, comprising the States of California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Nevada, Montana, and the Territory of Arizona, is so large and the amount of business is so great that much delay is necessarily caused in the dispatch of business, and tardy justice is frequently the greatest injustice.

That Idaho is becoming a great mining and irrigation State, and many foreign corporations have been and are being organized by resident and non-resident citizens for the transaction of business in this State, and many foreign corporations are doing business in the State of Idaho.

That the large amount of legal business arising within this State is between citizens of different States, and such business appears to be constantly increasing.

That the business which would fall within the jurisdiction of the proposed circuit in the main is peculiar to this intermountain region and is wholly different from that arising on the Pacific coast, and it is of paramount importance that the laws should be administered by judges who are not only learned in the law in general, but who are also familiar with the conditions of this region, and by reason of experience specially fitted to make the new application of the laws made necessary because of the difference. This is especially so as to mining and irrigation, which are the principal industries of the people within this region.

That the circuit courts exert a wholesome influence over the communities and ought to be nearer the homes of the people.

That owing to the large and constantly increasing business arising within the State of Idaho, every alternate term of the circuit court of appeals should be held in Salt Lake City, the nearest and most convenient point for citizens of Idaho.

That on account of the large number of questions of the greatest importance respecting mining and irrigation which arise within the limits of the proposed circuit, not less than three judges should constitute the circuit court of appeals.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully memorialize your honorable bodies to pass and enact said bill introduced by Senator WOLCOTT, so as to provide for the creation of said proposed tenth circuit, with jurisdiction as above indicated.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 16th day of February, 1899.

JOSEPH H. HUTCHINSON,
President of the Senate.

This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 23d day of February, 1899.

D. L. EVANS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within senate joint memorial No. 7, entitled "Memorializing Congress to pass and enact as a law the bill introduced into the Senate of the United States by United States Senator WOLCOTT, Colorado, providing for the creation of another judicial circuit, to be known as the tenth circuit, such new court established to have jurisdiction in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana," originated in the senate of the State of Idaho during the fifth session.

HARRY L. DAY,
Secretary of the Senate.

Received and filed in the department of state on the 28th day of February, 1899.

M. PATRIE, Secretary of State.

Mr. SHOUP presented a petition of the legislature of Idaho, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the land laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
STATE OF IDAHO.

I, M. Patrie, secretary of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 8, by Ellsworth and Averitt, a memorial petitioning Congress to amend land laws of the United States, which was filed in this office the 28th day of February, A. D. 1899, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State.

M. PATRIE, Secretary of State.

House joint memorial No. 8, by Ellsworth and Averitt. A memorial petitioning Congress to amend land laws of the United States.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America: We, your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of Idaho in regular session assembled and convened, do most respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States, and to your honorable bodies represent—

That inasmuch as recent investigation and actual experience upon extensive scale have demonstrated that large tracts of land upon which no water can be had on account of its elevation can be utilized for successful farming, and that what is commonly known as "dry farming" has proven a great success in many of the said districts of the West; and inasmuch as the extent of such lands is unlimited; and inasmuch as same are so great in elevation that water can not be run upon the same, and hence proof under the desert laws can not be made thereof; and inasmuch as the said lands are so great in altitude that water for domestic purposes can not be had, making it impossible to live upon the same, and hence impossible to comply with the homestead laws of the United States; that it is therefore of the greatest interest and importance to the Government and the people that there be some change or revision in the law that will enable your citizens to locate and make proof on said lands, either under the desert or homestead laws of the United States. We, your memorialists, therefore pray you that some suitable change in the law be at once made; and your memorialists will ever pray.

This joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 20th day of February, 1899.

D. L. EVANS,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This joint memorial passed the senate on the 25th day of February, 1899.

JOSEPH H. HUTCHINSON,

President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 8 originated in the house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho at this fifth session.

M. PATRIE,

Secretary of State.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented a petition of sundry citizens of Meckling, S. Dak., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation giving to American shipbuilders and American steamship owners such encouragement as to cause them to build and maintain such a merchant marine as will successfully compete with all foreign nations for the carrying trade on the high seas; which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Memorial to Congress, No. 1 A.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America assembled:

Whereas our American merchant marine during the past forty years has so declined that at the present time less than 10 per cent of our exports are carried abroad under our own flag, instead of 90 per cent being so carried, as was the fact at the beginning of this period; and

Whereas our iron and steel industries have reached such a stage of development that we can now furnish the raw material for shipbuilding at as low a cost as any nation; and

Whereas the State of Wisconsin is dependent upon foreign markets for the disposition of its surplus grain, stock, and dairy products: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That for the benefit of our farmers, miners, and manufacturers and for the prosperity of our whole State, as well as the nation, we hereby petition Congress now in Washington assembled to speedily enact such laws as will give American shipbuilders and American steamship owners such encouragement as to cause them to build and maintain such a merchant marine as will successfully compete with all foreign nations for the carrying trade on the high seas and be an honor to our nation.

Resolved, That the governor is requested immediately to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to our Wisconsin Senators and Representatives in Congress.

GEO. H. RAY,

Speaker of the Assembly.

JESSE STONE,

President of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of the legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to name one of the three armored cruisers "Milwaukee," after the capital of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution.

Whereas the Secretary of the Navy has asked the Congress for authority to build three armored cruisers for service in the Navy; and

Whereas most of the greater cities of the United States are represented among the ships of the new Navy: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly and the senate of the State of Wisconsin, That all the Senators and Representatives of the State of Wisconsin in the Congress of the United States be, and are hereby, requested to present to the Secretary of the Navy as a suitable name for one of these armored cruisers the name of the metropolis of our State, Milwaukee; and furthermore be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the Representatives and Senators of the State of Wisconsin in the Congress of the United States immediately upon its adoption.

JESSE STONE,

President of the Senate.

GEORGE H. RAY,

Speaker of the Assembly.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the legislature of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to give to Congress concurrent jurisdiction with the several States for the suppression of trusts and other combinations to control production, stifle competition, and to regulate, for their own benefit, the price of products and the wages of labor; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to Congress for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to give to Congress concurrent jurisdiction with the several States for the suppression of trusts and other combinations to control production, stifle competition, and to regulate for their own benefit the price of products and the wages of labor.

The memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin to the Congress of the United States respectfully shows that in the opinion of the legislature the multiplicity and growing power of trusts and other combinations of capital for the purpose of controlling the markets for various products, including the necessities of life, is not only a menace to the interests of the people, but is the cause of widespread popular discontent. The evil is almost universally admitted, as is the difficulty of devising methods for its eradication. The Congress is limited in its legislation to subjects confessedly within the Federal jurisdiction. There is, in the nature of things, no uniformity in the legislation of the States upon the subject. Indeed some of the States, it is believed, are entirely without adequate legislation for the protection of their citizens in this respect. The act passed by Congress some years ago has been pronounced by the Attorney-Generals of the United States to be inadequate. The great trust or combination prosecuted in one State, by legislative investigation or otherwise, seeks and finds refuge in another. It is believed that the only sure remedy for this evil will be found in giving to Congress of the United States power to legislate upon the subject, to provide for civil suits in the name of the United States and in the courts of the United States, and for such criminal prosecutions as may be found necessary, even if these corporations are State corporations, and even if they adopt devices, as they have in the past, to carry on their large commerce, keeping technically beyond the pale of interstate commerce and the Federal jurisdiction.

It is not the purpose of this memorial to ask that any State be deprived of jurisdiction which it now possesses in this behalf, but it is respectfully prayed that there shall be promptly submitted to the legislatures of the respective States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall give Congress full and complete concurrent jurisdiction to enact legislation for the suppression of this evil regardless of State lines.

Resolved, That the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Wisconsin.

JESSE STONE,
President of the Senate.
GEO. H. RAY,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, 22:

This memorial to Congress originated in the senate.

W. L. HOUSER, Chief Clerk.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petitions of W. B. Millard and 28 other citizens of New London, R. L. Cheney and 30 other citizens of Endeavor, Rev. William Moore and 89 other citizens of Clinton, F. A. Nelson and 51 other citizens of Fennimore, Samuel T. Kidder and 59 other citizens of Ripon, F. W. Kingsley and 156 other citizens of Sun Prairie, James Jefferson and 38 other citizens of Wisconsin, Jenner Pynch and 16 other citizens of Wisconsin, L. E. Osgood and 111 other citizens of Sturgeon Bay, J. K. Kilbourn and 24 other citizens of Pewaukee, J. A. Thomas and 112 other citizens of Wisconsin, Rev. George E. Plant and 50 other citizens of Arena, Charles E. Butters and 23 other citizens of Tomah, J. Anderick and 16 other citizens of Juda, M. C. Miner and 13 other citizens of Evansville, J. C. Button and 50 other citizens of Wisconsin, James Churn and 101 other citizens of Waupun, N. Matheson and 24 other citizens of Clintonville, N. H. Brokaw and 16 other citizens of Kaukauna, and B. F. Hanks and 88 other citizens of Waupaca, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KYLE. I present sundry petitions, signed by citizens of Revillo, Redfield, Yankton, Meckling, and Groton, all in the State of South Dakota, praying that a constitutional amendment be adopted making polygamy a crime against the laws of the United States.

I wish to state in this connection that some eight years ago I introduced a constitutional amendment to this end. It has not been acted upon as yet, though I think I introduced it in two different Congresses. I shall reintroduce the same amendment early in the present session and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I move that the petitions be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the general assembly of the State of Missouri, praying that an appropriation be made for the dredging and improving of St. Francis and Black rivers in Arkansas and Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, CITY OF JEFFERSON.

SIR: I have the honor of transmitting to you resolution passed by the house on the 9th day of March, 1899, and concurred in by the senate on the 19th day of March, 1899, as directed by said resolution.

Very respectfully,

H. A. NEWMAN,
Chief Clerk Fortieth General Assembly.

Whereas the State of Missouri and the counties lying in the southeastern part of said State are now engaged in draining the low lands of the St. Francis basin by cutting a system of ditches and canals to the line between the States of Arkansas and Missouri, and an outlet to the Mississippi River must be provided for this vast volume of water, else larger overflows in northeast Kansas are to be expected; and

Whereas the St. Francis and Black rivers having their source in Missouri, flowing south through the district in Missouri to be drained and through the State of Arkansas are choked up and greatly in need of dredging and improvement, and if dredged and improved will furnish an outlet for the overflow water from southeast Missouri and northeast Arkansas and are declared by Congress as waters of the nation and greatly lessen the danger and damage of overflow in said territory: Therefore, be it Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Missouri (the senate concurring therein), That we do respectfully ask and recommend to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Missouri that they join with the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Arkansas in an effort to have St. Francis and Black rivers dredged and improved so as to properly drain St. Francis basin in Arkansas and Missouri.

Resolved further, That the clerk of this house be required to furnish a copy of these resolutions to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Missouri and a copy to the governor of Missouri, to be by him transmitted to the general assembly of said State of Arkansas.

Mr. COCKRELL presented resolutions adopted by the Missouri Bankers' Association at its last convention, praying that our consular system be established upon a permanent basis regardless of politics and that our Government establish an academy for the special training of those who wish to enter the consular service; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Union Soldiers of the Gentry County Missouri Home Guards, praying for the correction of the rolls of their regiments so as to show their muster in to have been June 1, 1861, instead of August 28, 1861, as reported by the Hawkins Taylor Congressional Commission, together with the affidavits of Joseph Margason and Thomas Grantham, of B. McClellan and E. Clagdill, of W. P. Cobbs and J. O. Long, of Sidney Wilson and Samuel Stinson, and of W. H. Cranor and Samuel Sale; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Lieut. M. E. Saville, first lieutenant, Tenth Infantry, United States Army, praying that certain moneys be refunded him covered into the Treasury of the United States by reason of the embezzlement of Government funds by a civilian employee while he was quartermaster of the post of Fort Sill, Okla., in 1897; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Daniel M. Page, of Missouri, praying that he be reinstated as first lieutenant in the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Frank E. Kellogg, collector of internal revenue of the Sixth district of Missouri, praying that indemnity be granted to him for the loss of a retail liquor dealer's special-tax stamp book; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Isaac Patterson, private, Company C, Third Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, praying that he be granted an increase of pension; which, with the accompanying affidavits of Dr. G. W. Gregory, John Willis, and Harry Moreland and a report from General Ainsworth giving his military record, was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Dr. Franklin Cooley, surgeon, Fourteenth Missouri Home Guards, praying that he be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Levi C. Faught, formerly of Company B, Greene County Missouri Home Guards, praying that he be granted a pension; which, with the accompanying affidavits of John W. Keltner, H. W. Keltner, J. W. Faught, I. W. Edwards, and Jacob Stephenson and with letters of General Ainsworth and Dr. G. P. S. Brown, was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William H. Miller, late of Company C, Second Battalion, Ohio Cavalry, praying that he be granted a pension; which, with the accompanying affidavits of J. P. Ring, Jacob Nicholas, and Dr. James Evans and military record and Pension Office letter showing rejection of claim for pension, was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Noble, Clearmont, Eldon, Wellsville, Breckenridge, Moberly, and Jacksonville, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KENNEY presented sundry petitions of citizens of New-castle and Wilmington, all in the State of Delaware, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLAURIN presented the petition of Thomas J. Mackey, of Palmetto Regiment, Mexican war, a citizen of South Carolina, praying that he be restored to the pension roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented the petition of Eugenia A. Stone, of Greenville, S. C., praying that she be reimbursed for damages done to her property by the Volunteer Army during the war with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MONEY presented the petition of John L. Record, of Marshall County, Miss., praying that his claim for stores and supplies taken from him during the civil war be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee consisting of three members from the Senate and three members from the House of Representatives be appointed to make arrangements for the reception and unveiling on January 18, 1900, of the statue of Daniel Webster presented to the United States by Mr. Stilson Hutchins and erected on Massachusetts avenue, in the city of Washington.

DESERTIONS FROM THE ARMY.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a statement giving the number of desertions each month from the United States Army (regular and volunteer separately) since the 1st day of February, 1899.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That NATHAN B. SCOTT, now occupying a seat as a Senator from West Virginia, is not entitled to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask that the memorial of John T. McGraw, which was presented to the Senate during the last Congress by Senator Faulkner, of West Virginia, may be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in connection with the resolution which has just been referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

PRACTICE OF POLYGAMY, ETC.

Mr. RAWLINS. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to inquire into and to report to the Senate—First. To what extent polygamy is practiced or polygamous marriages entered into in the United States or in places over which they have jurisdiction.

Second. Have polygamists or persons reputed to have more than one wife been elected to office by the people of Utah, and, if so, has such election been for the purpose of encouraging polygamy or in violation of any compact between said State and the United States?

Third. Have polygamists or persons reputed to have more than one wife been appointed to office by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or in cases where the concurrence of the Senate is not required; and, if so, have such appointments been made in aid of polygamy or in violation of the compact between the United States and the State of Utah with reference to that subject?

Fourth. What, if any, steps should be taken or measures enacted for the prevention of polygamy in the United States and in places over which they have jurisdiction?

Mr. WOLCOTT. What was the request in connection with that resolution, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senate proceed to its present consideration.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado objects to the present consideration of the resolution and moves its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to make to the Senate a report showing the number of ounces and the coinage value of all the silver bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890; the coinage value of the seigniorage thereon; the amount of Treasury notes issued in payment therefor; the amount of silver dollars coined therefrom to March 4, 1897; the seigniorage thereon; the amount of Treasury notes redeemed in silver dollars and retired to March 4, 1897; the amount of silver dollars coined therefrom from March 4, 1897, to December 1, 1899; the seigniorage thereon; the amount of Treasury notes redeemed in silver dollars and retired from March 4, 1897, to December 1, 1899; and the amount of Treasury notes outstanding December 1, 1899, and the amount of such silver dollars remaining unused in such redemption.

IMPROVEMENT OF TACOMA HARBOR.

Mr. FOSTER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of dredging and otherwise improving the harbor of the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, in accordance with the recommendations filed in the War Department.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC.

Mr. MASON. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have laid upon the table for the present, to be hereafter referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by Senator from Illinois will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas from the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other people to free themselves from European domination: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That we watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the South African Republic against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be printed.

Mr. MASON. Let the resolution lie on the table and be printed, to be hereafter referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I desire on some convenient day to occupy about ten minutes of the time of the Senate on the resolution before it is referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the resolution will be printed and lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Illinois.

APPOINTMENTS OF COMMISSIONERS OR AGENTS.

Mr. VEST. I submit a resolution which I ask to have referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, That in order to maintain the absolute independence of the various departments of the Government, as intended by the Constitution, no person while holding a judicial or legislative office under the United States should be appointed by the President commissioner or agent of the Government, nor in any department thereof.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolution may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is a vacancy in the minority representation upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and in view of the business before that committee, I think it proper to have that vacancy temporarily filled. It is understood, of course, by members of the Senate that there is an arrangement in process for the reorganization of the committees, but, pending that, this vacancy should be filled. I therefore move that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] be put on that committee to fill such vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] be made a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. COCKRELL. Temporarily.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection to filling the vacancy temporarily, as moved by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the motion—that the vacancy be filled temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 7, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 978) to remove the charge of desertion from John Marks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 979) to correct the military record of John J. Phelan, of Chicago, Ill.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 980) to increase the efficiency of the West Point Military Academy and the Annapolis Naval Academy, and to qualify and stimulate the American youth for actual military and naval service by suitable physical training instead of excessive mental education; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HALE. I do not know anything about the bill, but from its title it is something relating to the Military and Naval Academies. Will the Senator from New Hampshire state why it should go to the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. CHANDLER. It has direct reference to those two Academies, and proposes to substitute suitable courses of athletic instruction for the higher mathematics and the languages. Neither the Military Committee nor the Naval Committee, I assume, would like to take the bill, because it concerns both Academies, and it is preeminently a subject that the Committee on Education and Labor should deal with, because it concerns both education and labor; that is, athletics form a species of labor.

I am not unwilling that the Senator from Maine, who is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, shall take the bill if he insists upon it, but the bill has been conceived from a desire to increase the efficiency of the cadets at the two Academies, and I think the Committee on Education and Labor is the best committee to take up the subject seriously and dispose of it.

Mr. HALE. After the Senator's explanation I certainly do not want the bill in the Naval Committee. That is, I judge, from what the Senator has said, it is a bill providing for and encouraging football and games of the kind that are popular in college life, and where excellence in studies, in the old-fashioned pursuits of a student at college, is shoved to one side in favor of excellence at football and baseball.

I should hardly go as far as the Senator, for I presume that, as sponsor of the bill, he is in favor of it. I should hardly be in favor of any legislation to stimulate that form of training, all the more because I do not think it needs stimulating. The Naval Academy and the Military Academy evidently must go through the same course with the colleges of the country, where the prominent men in the classes are not the men who are excellent in studies, but in athletic games. The tendency is that way undoubtedly with the Military and the Naval Academies. I look to see the time when the famous men of those two Academies will not be the students, but the good players at athletic games; and there is a large element in the country who believe that that is better than to spend the time on books, in which, as has been said long ago, there is a dull and endless strife.

Under these circumstances I am entirely willing, representing the Naval Committee, that the bill shall go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say in reply to the Senator from Maine that if baseball is to be made a part of the training of the youth of the two Academies and contests are to be had at convenient localities in the United States, the proceedings should be legalized instead of going on without authority of law. The proposition I present is that the courses in athletics shall be regulated by law; that national contests shall take place at various points in the United States, and that the railroads shall run free trains, in order that there may be a full attendance at those contests, without violating the existing interstate-commerce law.

I present that proposition to the Committee on Education and Labor for their consideration, with the permission of the Senators upon the two committees, the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire goes on much longer in this vein, people will think he is in earnest, which would be bad for him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 981) for the relief of the estate of William W. Burns, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

GEORGE W. ALLEN.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas, heretofore, to wit, on or about the 15th day of January, 1892, George W. Allen, after having passed the required examination and found to be in all respects worthy and capable, and having served the required probationary term of service, was duly appointed superintendent of the national cemetery known as the Fort McPherson National Cemetery, and located at Fort McPherson, in the State of Nebraska; and

Whereas the said George W. Allen, having served as such superintendent until on or about the 14th day of October, 1893, when, by order of the War Department, for his honesty, efficiency, and good management of all matters of business pertaining to the keeping and caring for said cemetery, he was promoted in the service and transferred to a national cemetery in Pulaski County, State of Kentucky, and known and designated as Mill Springs National Cemetery; and

Whereas, in pursuance of said order of promotion, the said George W. Allen proceeded to take charge of, and did take charge of, and to diligently, honestly, and faithfully perform all the duties of a superintendent of the said national cemetery at Mill Springs, in the State of Kentucky, in conformity with the rules and regulations of the service, and to the best of his judgment, skill, and ability; and

Whereas the said George W. Allen was, on or about the 27th day of March, 1896, summarily dismissed from the superintendency of said last-mentioned cemetery, without any fault upon his part, upon a naked charge, unsupported by a single witness, and without the privilege of a hearing or of an investigation of said charge; and

Whereas the said George W. Allen did, on or about the — day of June, 1896, file his application in the War Department for his reinstatement as superintendent of the said national cemetery at Mill Springs, in the State of Kentucky; and

Whereas the said George W. Allen has filed in the War Department from time to time for the last two years affidavits, sworn statements, and depositions of many creditable and respectable persons of the State of Nebraska in support of said application and in refutation of each and every charge against him; and

Whereas the War Department has refused and still refuses to consider said application, affidavits, and depositions, and to open and consider the matter of the reinstatement of the said George W. Allen: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the honorable Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to transmit without delay to the Senate of the United States all the documents, records, and papers pertaining to said case now on file in the War Department.

PERMANENT SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for the printing of a document. It is the report of the committee of the Columbia Historical Society upon the removal of the permanent seat of government to the District of Columbia in 1800. It is not very long; perhaps fifteen letter-press pages. It has been prepared by Mr. A. R. Spofford, of the Congressional Library, and it would be exceedingly convenient to the committee who are acting in regard to a suitable celebration of that event to have this report in the form of a Senate document. The Senate is aware that under a resolution passed last winter the President has appointed the governors of all the States in the Union, with some other persons, I think, as a committee on that subject. They are to have a meeting in Washington within a few weeks, and I ask unanimous consent that this paper may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the order for the printing of the document named by him will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 11, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that two members are present ready to be sworn in.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hawley, a member-elect from the State of Texas, is ready to be sworn in.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Howard, of Georgia, Mr. Speaker, is also ready to be sworn in.

Mr. Hawley, of Texas, and Mr. Howard, of Georgia, having presented themselves at the bar of the House, were duly qualified, taking the oath of office prescribed by law.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to announce the following Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

The Speaker; Mr. DALZELL of Pennsylvania, Mr. GROSVENOR of Ohio, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Mr. BAILEY of Texas.

SPECIAL EMPLOYEES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

Mr. SULZER. I suppose the resolution will be read for information?

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That during the Fifty-sixth Congress, and until the organization of the Fifty-seventh Congress, Isaac R. Hill be authorized to act as special employee of the House of Representatives and receive a compensation at the rate of $1,500 per annum.

That Ewing C. Bland and Felton B. Knight be authorized to act as special messengers of the House of Representatives, each to receive a compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum; and

That James F. English be authorized to act as special chief page of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $300 per annum.

The compensation of said employees to be paid from the contingent fund until otherwise provided.

That John T. Chancey be continued during the Fifty-sixth Congress as a special employee of the House at the annual compensation of $1,500.

Said officers shall at all times be under the direction and control of the Speaker of the House, and they shall be subject to removal for cause at any time by him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just reported?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], this resolution is exactly in accordance with the resolution passed at the beginning of each session.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is. The first four named in the resolution are the officers assigned to the minority, and they are the ones selected by the minority caucus. The other (Mr. Chancey) has been selected by the caucus of the Republicans. The resolution does not increase the number of employees of the House at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the resolution provide for the pages?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, upon that point I want to say a word. We have about 175 members occupying seats on this side of the Chamber and about the same number on the other side. If I am correctly informed, in the division of the pages, 10 have been assigned to that side of the House and 5 to this side.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not understand the gentleman's inquiry. I understood him to ask if the resolution provided for the pay of these officers. There is nothing stated in the resolution in respect to the pages, except as to Mr. English, the chief page on that side. It has never been the custom heretofore to divide the pages by resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, I know that is not the custom, and I shall not insist upon that; but I did want to give expression to what I have already said, Mr. Speaker, and that is, it seems to me that we ought to have a better division of the pages, for we find in our efforts to be waited upon here that it is impossible, with the small number assigned to this side, to get fair service.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the present division is nine upon this side of the House and seven upon that side of the House; but I understand that it is the intention, as soon as the House is organized, to make a more equal division, owing to the increased number upon that side. There will be no trouble upon that score at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the resolution just reported?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE FINANCIAL BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to see if an amicable arrangement can not be made on the part of the House for the consideration of the finance bill, which is now known as House bill No. 1. Some gentlemen on both sides have made inquiry as to when debate on that bill may be begun. I learn that there is quite a general feeling, shared at least by the members on this side of the Chamber, in favor of an immediate consideration of that bill; and I trust that some arrangement may be made with members on the other side of the Chamber whereby that proposition may be taken up soon. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in Committee of the Whole, beginning immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is a most unusual proposition. Here is a great financial measure presented to the House. It has never been considered by any committee of the House. We learn from the press that the bill has been matured, carefully prepared, carefully considered during the vacation, by a committee selected by the majority to prepare this bill. It has been put in shape, it seems, after the amplest consideration by that committee, in this city and in other cities, the committee having sat, if we are correctly informed, at various places in the United States. I do not object to that, but I do think that when they come here with a bill carefully prepared, deliberately arranged, carefully studied in all its details by that committee and by gentlemen on that side of the House who have had access to—I do not say it offensively—the secret consultations and deliberations of that committee, we on this side are placed at a very serious disadvantage.

No member on this side of the House even knows the contents of the bill we will be called upon to consider. No committee on this side of the House has had an opportunity to analyze its provisions, to be able to state to this House and to this country what we think of it. So, Mr. Speaker, when we are confronted here by a proposition to grant unanimous consent that such a financial measure, of the gravity and importance of this bill, shall be taken up after two intervening week days, on next Monday, and then to be considered, it seems to me it is utterly unreasonable to suppose that we can be expected to agree to such a proposition. We insist that the bill shall be introduced; that it shall be referred to a regular committee of this House appointed by the Speaker, which shall act upon it as committees act upon other great measures and even the smallest measures that come before this House for consideration. There is no immediate necessity for the passage of this bill in a few hours.

There is no financial trouble ahead of us, it seems to me, for the next ten days, two weeks, or a month. We want to consider it; and I insist that instead of taking it up without any kind of an investigation by gentlemen on this side of the House, that it should go to a committee, and that committee should be composed of members of the majority and members of the minority, that they may carefully scan the bill and learn something of its details, and that it may be presented as every great measure and as all small measures are presented to this House. That is the position that I take, and that is the only position I am authorized to take. I shall have to object to unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if he would object to printing in the Record a statement prepared by myself relative to the provisions of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to the request for unanimous consent for the consideration of bill No. 1. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a statement touching the provisions of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose the gentleman would print the bill we are to consider.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill is already printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill, you say, is printed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill has been introduced and has been printed, and is known as House bill No. 1. I want to ask unanimous consent to print in the Record a statement concerning the provisions of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I conferred, Mr. Speaker, with the gentleman from Indiana, and he told me that he had prepared something of a nonpartisan statement, analyzing the bill that he asks us to give unanimous consent to consider.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana if his request covers anything but the printing of the bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, the bill has been printed already. The bill is introduced.

Mr. TERRY. What else do you want to print?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Let there be order in the House, so that gentlemen may hear.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say that the bill has been regularly introduced and is now in print, the same as any other bill before the House.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The request which I want to make is that I may be permitted to print in the Record a statement in the nature of an analysis of that bill.

Mr. TERRY. I understand, then, that you want, in substance, to print in the Record of this Congress a stump speech in favor of that bill. I object. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all. I was making an inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. McCULLOCH rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman who rose to ask me a question.

Mr. MADDOX. I hear it stated around me—

Mr. McCULLOCH. I desire to say to the gentleman from Indiana that I am informed by friends around me that none of those bills can be had. They have been exhausted, and I suggest that more bills be printed.

Mr. MADDOX. That is the question I was about to ask.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would suggest that the bill be printed in the Record.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill and statement. I then renew the request, at the suggestion of my friend from New York, that the bill and statement be printed in the Record.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, if that be done, that there be some statement with reference to the size of the type. The type that the Record is usually printed in is too small for convenient reading and making any comment on. I think there should be twenty or thirty thousand copies of the bill itself, printed in the usual bill form, because if you take the bill in its regular form you can make such comment and annotation indicating such amendment as you desire to offer, whereas if you print the bill in the Record it is closely printed, in small type, difficult to read, and impossible to annotate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the gentleman make the request to print 5,000 copies of the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill itself?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In bill form, to be distributed through the folding room, instead of going to the document room, where one or a dozen members may go and get the whole number that have been printed. Let it be divided among the members evenly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I approve that request of the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until the House is in order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Say 10,000 copies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will suspend until there is order in the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], which I approve, I request that 10,000 copies of the bill be printed and distributed through the folding room in the ordinary pro rata to members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that 10,000 copies of the House bill No. 1 be printed and distributed to members pro rata through the folding room.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me conclude my request. And an equal number—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I request that an equal number of the statement be printed and distributed in like manner.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is the bill in the hands of the House, bill No. 1, the one you expect to pass in the House, or are there amendments which you propose to offer?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill known as House bill No. 1 is the bill we desire to be considered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Have there not been amendments agreed upon which you expect to offer?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No amendments to the bill; this is the bill in its entirety.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the printing of the statement. I would like, however, to ask the gentleman if he knows whether there will be any amendments presented?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is something I can not answer.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman from Indiana present any amendments?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no amendments myself to present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say that the difficulty in getting consent to print the statement is the difficulty I presented a moment ago. This is the statement of the majority. In all cases where bills are considered there is a minority representation. Before any statement is printed that minority has a right to submit its views, and those views are printed, and they go out with the report or argument of the majority in the case. Now, in this case there would nothing go out except the ex parte argument or statement of the majority. For that reason I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I have no objection in the world that a reasonable time, such as the gentleman shall name, shall be granted within which the minority, if it so chooses, may prepare a statement containing their views on this identical proposition, and that they shall have accorded to them the same privilege of printing a number of copies equal to the request I make.

Mr. TERRY. We want to start out together.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT FROM UTAH.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate into the right of Brigham H. Roberts to a seat in the House of Representatives be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ADDYSTON PIPE COMPANY ET AL. AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Addyston Pipe Company against the United States, decided during this week. It is an opinion upon the subject of trusts and the application of the so-called Sherman law to the trusts of the country. As the House knows, these printed copies are not furnished to the House, and there is only a very limited number of them printed. I have secured one copy, and I offer a resolution that 5,000 copies of this opinion be printed for the use of the House.

of Representatives as a document, to be delivered, through the folding room, to the members of the House under existing rules.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Who delivered the opinion of the court?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Judge Peckham, of New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear what the gentleman from Ohio is saying.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. In matters of unanimous consent it is due to both sides of the House that they may distinctly hear what request is being made. The Chair appeals to members to observe order.

Mr. HULL. Will not the gentleman from Ohio make the request for distribution through the folding room?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have already made that request.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] send his resolution to the Clerk's desk, and then members will understand what it is? The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Addyston Pipe and Steel Company et al., appellants, vs. The United States, case No. 51, October 7, 1899, be printed for the use of the House, and be distributed to the members through the folding room under existing practice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio how long this opinion is. I have not seen it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Twenty pages of this size.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The object of my inquiry is that if it should cost more than $500 to print it the House can not pass a resolution to that effect.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not a printer, but I am quite sure that it will not cost one-quarter of it.

Mr. TERRY. What is the object of having this printed?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The object is to give the members of this House certain copies of this opinion for their own use, in such manner as they may see fit, and if they wish, to send to the various business associations in their districts.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio, before consent is given, if that opinion is for or against trusts and combines?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is very decidedly and far-reachingly opposed to trusts. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. With that assurance on the part of the gentleman from Ohio, I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM L. GREENE.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I have been delegated by the Congressional delegation from the State of Nebraska to announce to this body the death of our late colleague, Hon. William L. Greene, a Representative-elect from the Sixth district of the State of Nebraska.

At some future time the delegation from our State will ask the House to set apart a day for the purpose of paying proper tribute to the memory of our deceased colleague.

For the present I desire to offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask their immediate adoption.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. William L. Greene, late a Representative from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory, the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Alligator Head, in Matagorda Bay, Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 2537) to create the central division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 8, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Concurrent resolution No. 1.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee consisting of three members from the House of Representatives be appointed to make arrangements for the reception and unveiling on January 18, 1900, of the statue of Daniel Webster, presented to the United States by Mr. Stilson Hutchins and erected on Massachusetts avenue, in the city of Washington.

Concurrent resolution No. 2.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of dredging and otherwise improving the harbor of the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, in accordance with recommendations heretofore made and filed in the War Department.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House Resolution No. 16, report the following substitute therefor:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress be, and are hereby, amended as follows:

"Amend Rule X in the following paragraphs:

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on Foreign Affairs strike out the word 'fifteen' and insert 'seventeen'; so as to read as follows: 'On Foreign Affairs, to consist of seventeen members.'

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries strike out the word 'thirteen' and insert 'seventeen'; so as to read as follows: 'On the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to consist of seventeen members.'

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on the Public Lands strike out the word 'fifteen' and insert 'seventeen'; so as to read as follows: 'On the Public Lands, to consist of seventeen members.'

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on Military Affairs strike out the word 'fifteen' and insert 'seventeen'; so as to read as follows: 'On Military Affairs, to consist of seventeen members.'

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on Naval Affairs strike out the word 'fifteen' and insert 'seventeen'; so as to read as follows: 'On Naval Affairs, to consist of seventeen members.'

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on the Territories strike out the word 'thirteen' and insert 'fifteen'; so as to read as follows: 'On the Territories, to consist of fifteen members.'

"In the paragraph relating to the Committee on the District of Columbia strike out the word 'fifteen' and insert 'seventeen'; so as to read as follows: 'On the District of Columbia, to consist of seventeen members.'

"After the paragraph relating to the Committee on the Territories insert the following: 'On Insular Affairs, to consist of seventeen members.'

"Amend Rule XI as follows:

"After section 17 insert the following:

"18. To all matters (excepting those affecting the revenue and the appropriations) pertaining to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty of 1899 with Spain, and to Cuba: to the Committee on Insular Affairs."

"In the present section 18 strike out '18' and insert '19,' and so, through the succeeding sections, strike out the number of each section and insert the number next higher."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to provide for conditions that have recently arisen and to accomplish two things: First, to increase the number of members of some of the already established committees of the House—from 13, in one case, to 17 members, as in the case of Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and from 15 to 17 in a number of other committees. This increase has been deemed desirable owing to the great mass of business that must of necessity come before the House. It is believed that the increased membership will be necessary to meet this constantly growing business.

The other provision embodied in the resolution is for the creation of a new committee, called for by the new conditions prevailing by reason of the acquisition of the Philippine Islands and the island of Porto Rico under our recent treaty with Spain. It is proposed to care for these islands and their management by the creation of a new committee, to be known as the Committee on Insular Affairs, to consist of 17 members.

The only other changes are in the phraseology of the rule as it exists, which changes are made necessary by the modifications here proposed.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman have the grant of jurisdiction to this new committee again read from the desk?

Mr. DALZELL. I will ask to have read again the paragraph covering the grant of jurisdiction to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

"After section 17 insert the following: '18. To all matters (excepting those affecting the revenue and appropriations) pertaining to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty of 1899 with Spain, and to Cuba—to the Committee on Insular Affairs'"

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire a moment or two.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a moment to permit me to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does this give to the new committee jurisdiction of the island of Samoa?

Mr. DALZELL. It does not.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know that we have none, except so far as the ratification of the treaty is concerned.

Mr. DALZELL. It does not. It was thought best to leave that just as it is.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say first that as to the increase in the various committees named in the resolution I think it entirely proper, though I do not concede that the Committee on Rules was authorized at this time to report that proposition. I merely state that for the purpose of saving the point if it should arise hereafter, though neither my friend from Tennessee nor myself would hesitate to say that it would be assented to on a request for unanimous consent.

I desire further to say that as to the new committee there is no difference of opinion as to the propriety of its creation, but we do not assent to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that it is created for the purpose of permanently dealing with these possessions. Gentlemen on that side, of course, intend that they shall become permanent possessions of the United States. Gentlemen on this side entertain a different view; but we are agreed that whether they are to be permanent or temporary, the questions concerning them ought to go to a separate committee, and that committee ought to be composed of those who are among the best men in the House, because the committee is certain to become one of the most important during the present session of Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I expressed no opinion as to whether or not the Philippines would have to be dealt with temporarily or permanently, nor is there anything in the rule that indicates any opinion on that subject. The rule simply relates—

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will examine the stenographic report I think he will find it as I have said, and until that expression came from him I did not even intend to say a word.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I misunderstood the gentleman, then.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. Did you consider the question as to whether the affairs of Hawaii should also go to this same committee?

Mr. DALZELL. We did. The rule does not cover Hawaii at all.

Mr. LACEY. Why should it not? The situation is very largely the same and the problems are the same in many respects, excepting the mere Spanish part.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, the problems are not exactly the same, and the Committee on Rules thought that the present rules were sufficient to cover the case of Hawaii.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the resolution again.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the resolution will be again read.

There was no objection, and the resolution was again read.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE FINANCIAL BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Monday, December 11, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. No. 1, entitled "A bill to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes;" general debate thereon shall continue to not later than 5 o'clock p. m. of Friday, the 15th day of December, and thereafter debate under the five-minute rule until 5 o'clock p. m. of Saturday, the 16th day of December, at which time the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, with any amendments adopted by the committee, and a vote shall be taken on the bill and amendments, if any, without intervening motion, to final passage, immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday, the 18th day of December. And during said debate the House shall on each day adjourn not later than 5 o'clock p. m.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this rule is to provide—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not discuss the rule so as to cut off the forty minutes for debate.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly not; I have no intention of that kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. DALZELL. I was simply going to explain the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman understands if there is debate on the proposition, it cuts off the forty minutes' debate.

Mr. DALZELL. I would not take advantage of that fact.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But some other gentleman might.

The SPEAKER. There will be twenty minutes' debate on either side.

Mr. DALZELL. There will be twenty minutes' debate on either side. I had no intention of interfering with that.

The bill referred to in the rule is what is popularly known as the currency bill. It is desired on this side of the House that we get to work as promptly as possible; and yet there is no disposition—I think I speak for every member on this side of the House—to unduly press matters so as to cut off reasonable debate. The bill is a comparatively short one. It covers substantially only two subjects—securing and maintaining the gold standard and some necessary legislation in connection with national banks which logically follows thereon.

There is nothing in this bill that has not been in some shape or other heretofore presented to this House or to Congress by committees the membership of which, in part, was constituted from gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber; so that it seems that the time allowed for debate under the rule is generous, when it gives a week—five days for general debate and one day for debate under the five-minute rule, with an opportunity to offer and vote upon amendments, the final vote to be taken on the following Monday, after the reading of the Journal; that is to say, on Monday a week from next Monday.

Now, as I say, there is no disposition to unduly press matters, or to cut off reasonable debate, and the Committee on Rules are of opinion that this rule embodies a reasonable time. Having explained the rule, I have nothing further to say at this time. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for his twenty minutes under the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, those of us on this side of the Chamber dissent radically from the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he says there is nothing new in this bill. For the first time in our history, Mr. Speaker, a proposition is presented to us here to fasten upon this country by statutory enactment the single gold standard. That is something new in this country; and it is something on which gentlemen on that side of the House, almost without exception, if it had been laid up against them by specific charge two or three years ago, would have felt outraged, and would have resented the charge with righteous and just indignation. It is a new thing. I think that under all the circumstances it is unusual and unjust for us to be called upon to take up this bill on Monday, with only one week day remaining within which to prepare for the discussion of the measure. And, as I said on yesterday, gentlemen on that side of the House have had six months or a year to prepare themselves to enter upon the discussion of this great question, which is to uproot all the financial conditions of this country that have existed, some of them, for more than a hundred years.

I said on yesterday that we objected because this measure had not been submitted to any committee, a provision which time has proven wise and proper upon the part of this House. No question, great or small, is considered until it has been submitted to a committee composed of majority and minority members, in order that both sides of the question may be first considered in committee and the views of both sides submitted in a formal printed report to the House and to the country. In this case we are called upon to take up this bill on Monday. I asked on yesterday that the bill be regularly referred to an appropriate committee, that the Speaker announce the committee, and that that committee consider the question and then let us enter upon the discussion of the measure.

Some of us sought to have the House postpone taking up the measure until next Wednesday, only two days longer, and then give us an opportunity to take it up Wednesday and discuss it on until the 22d day of the month, about eight days, and then we would be prepared to vote upon it. They said, "No, we will not do that;" but they come in here—I do not wish to use a harsh or unparliamentary word—and crowd it through by taking it up on Monday and then call upon the House to vote upon it the following Monday.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Bulldozing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said on yesterday, there is no emergency on the subject. The bill says we are living under the gold standard. If that be so, there can be no need for haste in regard to this measure. There is no emergency for any proposed provision in this bill, and therefore we might have taken a little while longer in order that members on this side and the press of the country and intelligent men everywhere might have an opportunity to analyze and dissect this measure in every respect in order that we might vote for it or amend it if we saw fit to do so and deemed it wise to do so in some of its provisions.

Why, Mr. Speaker, take the time allowed us for discussion of this measure; and I venture to say that if you will undertake to call upon gentlemen who now occupy seats on that side of the House, much less other prominent gentlemen of this country, commencing with the President himself and coming on down through the line of gentlemen possibly not quite so illustrious but prominent in the history; if we should undertake to stand here and give those gentlemen time to make formal apologies to the House and to the country for their change of base on this proposition, you would not have time during the week to afford one-half of them an opportunity to do so. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] One week would not suffice; one day would not be enough for my learned friend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to make his explanations for his sudden change of base. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish the gentleman would not interrupt me; he shall have his time.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say to my friend that I never apologize. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is not as conscionable as I supposed he was. [Laughter.] The President of the United States himself, and nearly all the long line of illustrious men on that side of the House who now hold seats there, or have occupied seats there, must apologize to the country for this sudden and radical change of base on this great money question. It is too late for many to make apologies who have paid the debt to time and mortal custom and crossed over the river, but you gentlemen will have to make apologies for them before we get through this discussion. I do not want to take any more time now, but I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, nothing could better illustrate the difference between the two great political parties of this country than the resolution which has just been reported by the majority of the Committee on Rules. For this extraordinary proposition there is neither precedent nor defense, and yet I shall not, as some of our friends do, contend that it is a mere arbitrary and wanton exercise of power. The Republican majority have determined to proceed in this way because, having taken sufficient time to satisfy themselves, they care nothing about this side or the balance of the country. The Democratic members insist that there shall be a fair and thorough discussion of the bill to be considered, although we indulge no possible hope that any kind of a discussion will change the vote of any man in this Chamber.

But we look beyond this Chamber, and in that we differ from our friends across the aisle. They are content whenever the men charged with the immediate decision of a question are sufficiently informed to act. We look farther than the representatives of the people assembled here, back to the people themselves; and we believe that it is infinitely more important that the great masses of the voters shall understand this question at the end than it is that their representatives shall understand it to-day.

Our friends on the other side believe that when they declare that the representatives who decide all questions must answer on their responsibility they end all argument. We believe that the highest responsibility on the men who sit in this Chamber is to satisfy the people who send them here that they have wisely decided every question.

Our opponents frequently taunt us on this side with a desire to draw the debates out to an indefinite length; and I heard one of the most distinguished of them declare that nobody ever reads the speeches after they were delivered on the floor or printed in the RECORD. That may be true of his constituents and it may be true of yours, but it is not true of ours. Your people may confide in your wisdom unquestioningly and be content with your decision, but ours are not so easy to satisfy. They demand to know, and they have a right to know, the reason for our action. I undertake to say that there is scarcely a gentleman on this side of the House who, if he delivered a speech upon this subject and circulated it among the people of his district, would not be reasonably sure of having it read carefully by a majority of those who received a copy of it.

There are 25,000 Democrats in the district I have the honor to represent, and I do not believe that I state an exceptional case when I declare that if I should put into the hands of every Democratic voter in that district a copy of an interesting and instructive speech upon this subject, nine-tenths of them would find the leisure and the inclination to read it. Among such a people these speeches become an educational agency of incalculable value. The people hire us and pay us a salary not only to decide these questions as they arise, but to study them, and the people, whose representatives we are, are entitled to the benefit of our studies upon every subject.

It is the duty of every gentleman who occupies a seat—I was about to say in this Hall, but I will not assume to speak for gentlemen on the other side—but speaking for this side alone, it is a duty felt, appreciated, and performed by almost every member who has studied these questions to speak upon them and to send their speeches to their constituents. The difference between you and us is that you believe in the power of the Representative, we believe in the power of the people. While we have no hope, no expectation, of being able to persuade you, either by the old arguments which you once advanced or by the new ones which we may be able to advance, to vote against this measure, yet we simply desire the opportunity to prepare an appeal from your decision here to that greater tribunal, composed of the whole American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is not, Mr. Speaker, that we desire to speak simply for the sake of speaking. It is not that we desire to encumber the RECORD of the House with our opinions and remarks for the sake of persuading our constituents at home to believe that we are faithfully attending to the duties intrusted to us. But, sir, it is for the higher and more impersonal reason that we believe our constituents are entitled to the benefit of such arguments as we may be able to make, and it is for them, and not for ourselves, that we ask the opportunity to present our objections against the pending bill.

The time allowed before entering upon the consideration of the bill is totally insufficient. No gentleman on this side has prepared, even for a day, for that contest. And yet the gentleman in charge of the bill on yesterday asked permission to print an elaborate statement in vindication of it in the RECORD—a statement that has been already prepared and which I venture to assert is already in the printer's hands. Not only was that gentleman prepared to submit what was in the nature of a committee report, but the gentlemen who have cooperated with him in the consideration and preparation of the bill, each and every one of them, is ready to take the floor in support of it.

But, sir, they have not even stopped with insufficient time allowed us in which to prepare for the discussion of the matter. They have also refused a sufficient time for the consideration of it in the House, and to complete their utter disregard of our rights they have reported a rule that I believe is without precedent in the history of the House. This rule absolutely denies us the right to make a motion to recommit the bill.

Under the rules, which were adopted in such a hurry a few days ago, as administered by a man whose iron will gave them his name we were never denied the right to move to recommit a bill with or without instructions; but I warn you, gentlemen on this side, that if this present report from the Committee on Rules shall be adopted by the House, after you have occupied one day in a vain attempt to offer an amendment which shall save the greenbacks to the people of the United States, whose faithful and efficient servant they have been for the past twenty years, you will not be permitted to bring that question to a direct issue by the usual motion to recommit, for that right has been deliberately denied you by this rule. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS].

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, it matters not what may be my convictions upon the pending bill, and possibly it matters less what my vote will be when the matter is to be finally determined by this House; but I desire at this time simply to record my protest against the rule submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. First, because I believe in the old doctrine of American fair play; and secondly, as a Democratic member of the House of Representatives, I believe that the rights of the minority should be considered on this floor. I believe that this bill should have first been submitted to a committee appointed by the Speaker of the House, and go through the regular routine provided by the rule, and then that our Democratic Representatives should have been given an opportunity to prepare such statement as they might desire to make in connection with it in explanation of its provisions, in order that their statements might be placed not only before the House, but also before their constituents throughout the country.

What has become of the sense of fair play on the other side of the House? It has disappeared like the mists before the summer's sun; and that side will have to answer, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has said, to the American people for their lack of consideration for the rights of the minority.

In the last House it is true that the majority on the other side was much larger than it is here to-day. But in this House, with the opposition majority so much smaller, we, by the voice and vote of the Democratic minority, are speaking the wishes and voicing the interests of almost thirty millions of the people of the United States.

I simply desired, then, in the brief time allotted to me to record my protest in their name against this rule and in the interest of fair play to the rights of the minority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield now two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in the beginning that the introduction of this bill marks the absolute and complete surrender of this Administration to the gold syndicate of the world. [Applause on Democratic side.] It is turning back upon the traditions and principles of the plain people of America, and is toadying to the aristocrats and to the men who "turn up their pants" in America when it is raining in England. [Laughter and applause.]

No darker conspiracy against the rights of the plain people of America was ever shadowed than in this bill. All the fight against free silver in the past was but the preliminary skirmish to the battle that is now before the American people to determine whether or not we shall surrender to the banking interest of the world. It is the same old fight that was waged in the days of Jackson, and it is a fight, sir, that will be continued to the bitter end, no matter what this Congress may do. It will be continued in behalf of the plain people of the country as long as they have representative on this floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it was not the purpose of the Committee on Rules in reporting the resolution now pending before the House to curtail proper debate upon the proposed measure. Nor do I think that it can be justly said that there is such a limitation of time as will work an injustice.

Here is a proposition that has been printed in the newspapers with the report of the caucus that framed the bill, which has been in the hands of the readers of the public press for many days. And then what is more significant than that is the fact that every question involved here has been the subject-matter of the discussions between the political parties of the country for the past twenty or twenty-five years. Time after time bills have been introduced in Congress, and there is not one distinct proposition in the bill now under consideration that has not been reported favorably from the committees of this House already and filed for the consideration of the House to which they belonged.

Is it possible that there is to be something new said about this question? I think not. I call the attention of the gentleman to my suggestion when I say I think that next Monday and next Tuesday and Wednesday it will be difficult for gentlemen managing the debate upon that side of the House to supply the men as rapidly as the time will be accorded to them to occupy their share of the time in the debate. Not one question here but is an old question which has been thrashed over upon every stump, in every newspaper, and in this body for all the years to which I have referred.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] says that it will be difficult for this side of the House to explain their changes of front. Well, let me say to the gentleman that it is one of the proudest boasts of the Republican party and of its individual members that they are wiser now than they were a good many years ago. I do not know a public man in this House, nor in any other House, who holds upon every question of the day the identical position which he held at some former period of his life. I should be sorry for a public man coming into public life a young man and staying in it until he is an old man if he found himself at the later period of his life not knowing any more than he did when he first started out. The Democratic party is the only well-recognized demonstration of the fact that a great organization in this country can survive for a long period of years and learn nothing by experience. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The Republican party has learned a great deal. It has met the emergencies that have arisen. It has adjusted itself to the conditions that grew out of legislation. It has been the leader of the great development of public sentiment. It has not been the master with a whip, driving public sentiment, but it has been the guide of public sentiment into the proper channels of execution.

Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], in all kindness and with my congratulations upon the position which he occupies in the House, that while some of our friends on this side may want to apologize—I think there are none, but if there are, it will be a very small matter in importance as compared with the necessity for gentlemen on that side to be able to hold themselves together upon the questions involved right here. Our past is behind us. Our present conditions we are proud of. Our future we feel to be assured. Will the gentleman from Tennessee say that much?

Mr. RICHARDSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He was not sure of the position of gentlemen on that side until his caucus of last week, was he? [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, now, I might retaliate upon my friend by reference to some recent votes in the House. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] But I would scorn to do such a thing as that. There never was held in this House a caucus that came together with the unanimity of purpose which characterized the caucus of the Republican party upon this measure. [Applause upon the Republican side.]

There never was a difference of opinion upon the ultimate purpose of this bill between any one member of the majority of this House and the balance of the members. There may have been differences of opinion about the road to travel to reach the goal. But I do not want to be turned aside. I want to warn my friend from Tennessee to be looking out for the future. Turn your face to the front and see the disintegration going on in your party in the country, and be careful that you do not too vigorously and too emphatically emphasize your views upon the 16 to 1 idea of the Democratic party of four years ago. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Republican party will have to turn aside from nothing it advocated in 1896. But, Mr. Speaker, all this is for the future.

The members of the House will appreciate that there is no purpose here to stifle debate and that in six long days there is ample opportunity for the fullest debate upon these questions involved; and therefore it was thought that, inasmuch as the Christmas holidays ought to begin as early as Wednesday week after next, to give the whole of next week to debate and place the vote on Monday, with the probability of a practical adjournment of the House as early as Wednesday, was the best that could be done.

Mr. TERRY. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to proceed in order, why did he not let this bill be introduced and referred to a committee, as has been the precedent in this House for a century?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are two subdivisions to my answer. The first is that "the gentleman from Ohio" does not control this side, and in the second place, the action of "the gentleman from Ohio" is abundantly approved by the gentlemen who sit around him.

Mr. TERRY. I perceive that the gentleman from Ohio is in all things an opportunist.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has five minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. In that time, Mr. Speaker, I will state that I should not have said a word had not the gentleman from Tennessee done me the honor to refer to me personally. I am for this rule. It is true that I voted in 1877 or 1878, before resumption, for the free coinage of silver. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There were but eight points between gold and silver at that time. At that time, with resumption approaching, the Democracy mainly took the ground for fiat money. I believed then, under those conditions, that the free coinage of silver would overcome the eight points. Since that time we have had resumption, and practically a gold standard for twenty years. Now, my friend from Tennessee, with all the equities between debtors and creditors on contracts made since 1870, amounting to fifty or seventy-five billions of dollars and contracted upon the present basis, wants to journey halfway to fiat money—to the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1. Conditions have changed and I have progressed. He lives with the changed conditions of thirty years ago; I live in the present, without pride of opinion, ready to meet the present emergencies, and he dwells with the ghouls in the ancient graveyards. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I should be disposed to leave this debate without another word did I not want to call the attention of my friend from Texas and my friend from Tennessee to some Democratic rules that have been introduced into this House which seem to have escaped their memory. My friend from Texas says that this rule is unprecedented, both as respects time and as respects the provision which calls for a vote without any intervening motion. But his memory is unfortunate. The memory of my friend from Tennessee is unfortunate. On the 13th day of August, 1894, in a Democratic Congress, on a tariff bill which the greatest Democrat since Andrew Jackson—Grover Cleveland—[cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" on the Democratic side, and laughter and applause on the Republican side] proclaimed to be a measure of "perfidy and dishonor," and which was not then in the custody of this House, but in the custody of the Senate, a Democratic Committee on Rules, in violation of every parliamentary precedent, brought a rule into this House that vi et armis took that bill not in its custody, but in the custody of the Senate, placed it before this House, and upon two hours of debate forced it to passage; and that is not all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? The gentleman ought to state that there is no comparison between this bill and that which was pending in conference, and you can not amend or recommit a conference report, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania very well knows.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is perfectly well aware of the facts in the case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It could not be recommitted and could not be amended.

Mr. DALZELL. It could have been brought in here under regular parliamentary procedure, and not by rape, as was done by a Democratic committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman knows that a conference report can not be recommitted or amended.

Mr. DALZELL. That is not all. A bill that had never been printed, a bill that had never been referred to a committee, that put in jeopardy the great coal interests of this country, was authorized to be passed in this House with fifteen minutes' debate on either side by a rule which provided—notwithstanding the mistaken memory of my friend from Texas—that "the previous question shall be considered as ordered thereon and without delay or other motion the vote shall be taken."

Not only that, but a bill, never printed, nor even typewritten, never referred to any committee of this House, although committees were then in session, putting the great interests of iron ore upon the free list, was passed through this House under a gag rule that only allowed fifteen minutes' debate.

Bills affecting other interests of this country, involving great investments of capital, were passed through under the same rule on written bills, written at the desks of the members—referred to no committee, with fifteen minutes' debate on either side; and yet, notwithstanding that action of that Democratic House, my friends upon the other side rise to-day in their places, old and experienced members as they are, and assert that this rule is without precedent.

or justification. It is without precedent in a Democratic House, because it is drawn in the interest of free debate, and with a regard for the rights of the minority. In that respect it is a Republican and not a Democratic rule.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us have a division.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 144, answered "present" 4, not voting 42; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. GILLET of New York with Mr. BARTLETT.
Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. COX.
Mr. EMERSON with Mr. MULLER.
Mr. HEDGE with Mr. HENRY of Mississippi.
Mr. HARMER with Mr. SWANSON.
Mr. LOVERING with Mr. NAPHEN.
Mr. PEARRE with Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts.
Mr. CHICKERING with Mr. STALLINGS.
Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. JONES of Virginia.
Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. DRIGGS.
Mr. TOMPKINS with Mr. DALY of New Jersey.
Mr. ADAMS with Mr. BERRY.

For this day:

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. BURNETT.
Mr. JOY with Mr. CATCHINGS.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. BRADLEY.
Mr. LOUDENLAGER with Mr. SMITH of Maryland.
Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.
Mr. MORRIS with Mr. WILSON of New York.

Until Wednesday next:

Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. SCUDDER.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. KETCHAM. If he were present, he would vote

"aye" and I would vote "no."

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HEDGE. If he were present, he would vote "aye" and I would vote "no."

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. ADAMS. If he were present, he would vote "aye" and I would vote "no."

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN. I voted "no" under a misapprehension, and I now withdraw my vote. I would like to say that one of my colleagues, Mr. WILSON, was called home on account of sickness.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, has voted?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says that he is not recorded.

Mr. JETT. Then I desire to withdraw my vote. If he were present, he would vote "aye," and I would vote "no."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. JONES, is absent. He desired me to state that if he were here he would vote "no" on this proposition. Mr. LITTAUER, with whom he is paired, would vote "aye."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. STEWART, my colleague, is absent on account of sickness in the family. If present, he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to, was laid on the table.

PRINTING REPORT OF BOARD OF MANAGERS OF SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed by the Report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies of the report proper, 500 copies of the report of the assistant inspector-general on the State homes, and 150 copies of the record of members, for the use of the home.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if there is any particular reason why this matter should be hurried and not take the usual course and go to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. STEELE. The only reason is this: I consulted with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], a leading member on the committee, and he says that if we have the report printed now the additional copies will cost very little. If we wait until after the type is distributed it will cost a great deal. It will now cost but a small sum to get the 500 additional copies.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand that these copies are for the House?

Mr. STEELE. No; we print a certain number of copies for the House that go with the report. These additional copies we propose to print are required for the use of the State Homes and the National Homes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My question is this: Is the Public Printer engaged now in printing the edition of this work?

Mr. STEELE. No; the report has just been handed in by the Speaker and ordered to be printed. Now, while this is being done for the House, I want the additional copies for the use of the Homes. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question with reference to the concluding sentence of the resolution. It refers to 150 copies of the report. What report is proposed to be printed?

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL T. BAIRD.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the House the death of the Hon. SAMUEL T. BAIRD, a Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress and a member-elect to this Congress from the State of Louisiana.

At some future day we shall ask the House to set apart a time to pay fitting tribute to the character of the deceased.

I offer now the resolutions I send to the desk, and ask their immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SAMUEL T. BAIRD, a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress and a member-elect to this Congress from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate of the passage of these resolutions; and that as a further mark of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and in accordance therewith (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday.

THE SOUTHERN COTTON SPINNERS' ASSOCIATION,
SECRETARY AND TREASURER'S OFFICE,
Charlotte, N. C., November 11, 1899.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the cotton-yarn department of our association, which was convened in this city November 2, 1899, and at which meeting there were representatives of over sixty cotton mills, representing millions of dollars invested capital, resolutions, of which the following is a copy, were offered and unanimously adopted.

Yours, very truly,

DR. JOHN H. MCADEN, President.
GEORGE B. HISS, Secretary and Treasurer.
RESOLUTIONS.

"Mr. D. A. Tompkins, of Charlotte, N. C., offered the following preamble and resolutions, seconded by Mr. E. B. Miller, of Shelby, N. C.:

"Whereas the increasing manufacturing interests of the United States from nine billion dollars value in 1890 to twenty billion (estimated) in 1900 makes it plain that our domestic markets can no longer take all our manufactured products; and

"Whereas the Southern cotton manufacturing interests alone have increased from the product in 1890 of one and a half million spindles to five million (estimated) in 1900, and the development of trade for our surplus American-made cotton goods has been largely in China and other oriental countries: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we urge upon the President of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress the following measures:

"First. The preservation of the integrity of the Chinese Empire, of all our treaty rights with that Empire, and the maintenance of an open-door policy in China with the commerce of all nations.

"Second. Vigorous prosecution of the Philippine war to a conclusion and the restoration of order in that territory by our Government.

"Third. Construction, without delay, of an isthmian ship canal.

"Fourth. Construction of a cable from the Pacific coast to Hawaii, Japan, China, the Philippines, and other oriental points.

"Resolved, That we consider that a large degree of the importance of the last three items lies in the value of those measures in accomplishing the first item and in protecting our trade in China and other Eastern countries.

"Resolved, That we recommend, if it be necessary, cooperation of our Government with the Governments of England and Japan to preserve and protect a common trade interest and treaty rights for unrestricted commerce in China and other Eastern countries.

"Resolved, That we recommend to Congress such revision of our navigation laws as will foster the development of our merchant-marine service to an extent to handle our expanding foreign commerce.

"Resolved, That we recommend to Congress such increase in our Navy as will make it fully adequate to protect our commerce in all seas and in all parts of the world.

"Resolved, That printed copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to the press."

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 330) to restore to their original status as to promotion officers of the Navy and Marine Corps losing numbers by reason of the advancement of other officers for exceptional and meritorious service during the war with Spain, reported it without amendment.

SPACE FOR COMMITTEE ROOMS.

Mr. SPOONER. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 24) relating to the use of the rooms lately occupied by the Congressional Library in the Capitol, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it be acted upon at this time.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPOONER. I will say about the joint resolution that under the law as it now stands both Houses have jurisdiction of the space. It is necessary, therefore, to pass a joint resolution giving each House a portion of the space. A similar measure has heretofore passed the Senate. If this joint resolution shall pass the other House, it will give us twelve new committee rooms. The plans are already made, and it is of the utmost importance for the convenience of Senators and the transaction of public business in the Senate that we should have those committee rooms at the earliest possible time.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS AT PARKERSBURG, W. VA.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 26) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the use of the United States post-office and court-house building at Parkersburg, W. Va., by the circuit court and criminal court of Wood County, W. Va., sitting at Parkersburg, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To what committee does the Senator from Alabama desire to have the bill referred?

Mr. PETTUS. I suppose it should go to the Committee on Public Lands or to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HOAR. Is it a bill for a grant of land to an agricultural school?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. HOAR. Have not such bills always gone to the Committee on Education and Labor or to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. PETTUS. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the impression that the bill should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. I think the original grant, which was advocated by the late Senator from Vermont, and all of the supplemental grants afterwards came from the Committee on Education and Labor; but if the bill proposes a mere grant of public land and does not appropriate so much money from the proceeds of it, it should go to the Committee on Public Lands. I have no objection to that reference.

Mr. PETTUS. I will state that this bill passed the Senate in the last Congress, but never got a hearing in the House. It was then referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That any contract, agreement, or combination between two or more corporations which has for its purpose the control of the price of anything which is the subject of or enters into interstate commerce or the cost of the transportation thereof, so as to increase the same at any place or locality in the United States or to discriminate in favor of or against any class of dealers, traders, or consumers of such articles within the United States, is contrary to the public policy of the United States, and every such contract, agreement, or combination is illegal and is prohibited.

SEC. 2. Any person being a member of any corporation or acting as its agent, officer, or employee who enters into any such contract, agreement, or combination or knowingly assists in the execution or performance thereof is guilty of a misdemeanor and is liable to prosecution for such offense on information or by indictment in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such offense is committed. And on conviction thereof such person shall be fined in a sum not less than $100 and not to exceed $5,000 and also be imprisoned for a term, in the discretion of the court in which such conviction is had, not less than one month and not greater than two years.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table. I desire to call it up at some future day and make some remarks on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

EX-SLAVE BOUNTY AND PENSION ASSOCIATION.

Mr. PETTUS. I introduce a bill by request. It is a bill of which I do not approve.

The bill (S. 1176) to provide pensions for freedmen, etc., was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, to the bill which has just been introduced. The bill has been presented in former Congresses, I think in either two or three Congresses, and in order that the Senator from New Hampshire may see the importance of taking action upon the bill at an early day I will ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at the request of the Senator from Missouri.

The bill was read at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons released from involuntary servitude, commonly called slaves, in pursuance of the proclamations of ex-President Abraham Lincoln, dated, respectively, September 22, 1862 and January 1, 1863, and in pursuance of amendments to the constitutions of the several States wherein slavery or involuntary servitude formerly existed, recognized by the Federal Constitution and laws of the United States, or by any law, proclamation, decree, or device whereby persons once held as slaves or involuntary subjects in consequence of race or color or Federal or State recognition of involuntary servitude, except for the commission of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall be, and hereby are, made pensioners upon the bounty of the United States, and also such persons as may be charged by laws of consanguinity with the maintenance and support of freedmen who are unable by reason of age or disease to maintain themselves.

SEC. 2. That any person who may have been held as a slave or involuntary servant under and by reason of any law of the United States, or of either of the States of the United States, or in consequence of any device or custom prevailing within such States or the United States, except for the commission of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, and who shall have been released from such servitude in manner before stated, and who shall at the date of the passage of this act have reached the age of 70 years, shall be entitled to and receive the sum of $500 from the Treasury of the United States, hereby authorized to be paid out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, and to the sum of $15 per month during the residue of their natural lives. This provision shall apply to male and female freedmen alike; and all persons so released from servitude who shall be less than 70 years of age and of the age of 60 years or over shall be entitled to and receive the sum of $30 and also $12 per month until they shall reach the age of 70 years, when they shall be entitled to and receive the greater sum hereinbefore stated as a monthly payment; and all persons released from servitude as before stated who shall be less than 60 years old and of the age of 50 years or over shall be entitled to and receive the sum of $100 and also $8 per month until 60 years old, when they shall receive $12; and all persons released from servitude as before stated who shall be less than 50 years of age shall be entitled to receive $4 per month until 50 years old, when they shall receive $8. All moneys herein authorized to be paid shall be dispensed from the general funds of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That relations or others who may be charged with the support of aged or infirm persons released from involuntary servitude in manner aforesaid shall be entitled to and receive the monthly pension awarded to such aged or infirm persons in whole or in part upon showing, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, that such support is afforded in a humane and becoming manner, the amount of such payment being under the control and direction of the Secretary aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to prepare all needful rules and regulations for the carrying into effect of the provisions of this act according to the true intent and meaning thereof, and to designate proper officers or agents through whom freedmen and other persons may make application for payment and receive moneys authorized to be paid by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That all needful rules and regulations for the carrying into effect of the provisions of this act shall be approved by Congress before the taking effect thereof.

SEC. 6. That the compensation of agents charged with the enforcement of this law shall be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by Congress.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1891.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] by request. He stated that he does not approve of the bill. It will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the bill, my attention having been called to it by the Senator from Missouri, I desire to say that, in my judgment, no such bill ought to have been presented to Congress. I hold in my hand what purports to be and is a certificate of membership in the Ex-Slave Bounty and Pension Association, bearing the number 1367, the headquarters being in Nashville, Tenn. It certifies—

That Kitty Baw, of Nashville, of the county of Davidson, State of Tennessee, is a member of the Ex-Slave Bounty and Pension Association, having paid the membership fee of 25 cents to aid in the passage of the ex-slave bounty and pension bill as presented to the Fifty-fourth Congress in the Senate of the United States by the Hon. JOHN THURSTON, of Nebraska. The holder of this certificate agrees to pay 10 cents per month to the local association to aid the State association and raise funds to promote the passage of the aforesaid bill.

I hereby testify that I was born a slave and am entitled to all the benefits included in said bill. My age is 35 years.

KITTY BAW.

Issued at Nashville, Tenn., this 5th day of July, 1897.

P. F. HILL, President and General Manager.
J. F. MANSON, State Secretary.

In my judgment this is one of the bills that ought not to receive, and I think I can safely say it will not receive, favorable consideration by the Committee on Pensions of this body. Some persons in the South are making a good deal of money out of this movement. They are deluding these poor people, men and women, into the belief that a bill of this character can pass Congress and that they can receive the amount of money named in the bill, and in view of that fact ex-slaves are paying an admission fee and 10 cents a month, which must be a burden to those poor people, to keep this association alive, in the hope that at some time a bill of this character will be enacted into a law.

Mr. MASON. I desire to say a word if it is proper. I suppose it is proper to discuss the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator yields, I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator asks permission, I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. MASON. I just want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the Senate that I was urged to introduce by request a similar bill in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and I did introduce it.

I wish to state that I believe it was used for a bad purpose. An immense correspondence came to me from all over the South, indicating that ignorant people there were solicited to pay 25 and 50 cents to join the association, to whom certificates were issued showing that they were contributing something to have some legislation passed. I do not know that the bill is not meritorious; but inasmuch as I was induced to introduce it without understanding it, in order that I may let my correspondents know about it in the future in this public way, I simply make this statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have here a memorandum from a special examiner of the Pension Bureau, dated Nashville, January 31, 1899, in which he says that "hundreds of these fraudulent certificates can be found in the hands of the old and ignorant negroes in this vicinity."

Mr. President, the Committee on Pensions, judging from the flood of bills that has been presented since this Congress commenced, will have its hands full if it considers the meritorious measures that will come before it. In this connection I wish again to make the request I made in writing to Senators during the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, that the individual Senators ought to share this responsibility with the committee and endeavor to ascertain before sending bills to the Pension Committee that they have some merit in them, whether they are general or special pension bills. We had nearly 3,000 bills before our committee during the last Congress, and Heaven only knows how many we shall have during the present Congress if the flood continues as it has commenced.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, in this same connection I desire to make a statement.

I heartily concur in the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire. At the first session of Congress when I took my seat as a Senator I was requested to introduce the bill which has since been reintroduced at subsequent sessions by other Senators. I stated when I introduced the bill that I did it by request; that it was drafted and submitted by an ex-Confederate soldier, Col. W. R. Vaughan, formerly of Virginia; that it had been introduced previously in the House of Representatives at a former session, and that I did not assume any responsibility for the bill.

Unfortunately, the bill was afterwards used all through the country, as I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire, for improper purposes. Its introduction caused me no end of annoyance. I think I have written and sent out answers to more than 2,000 inquiries, and I have always sent the same kind of a letter, assuring the writer that the bill had not the slightest chance of becoming a law, and that anyone attempting to use it for the purpose of creating an organization and collecting money was necessarily engaged in a fraudulent enterprise.

In order that the matter may have the widest publicity, I hope that, if the bill makes its appearance at the present session of Congress, its introduction, by unanimous action, will be denied.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether that would be exactly in order or not. If we had the old rules, where previous notice had to be given of the introduction of a bill at a subsequent time, the statement the Senator from Nebraska has made would be applicable to it.

I simply wanted to urge upon the Senator from New Hampshire the propriety of having his committee immediately report this bill back adversely to the Senate, and that will answer the same purpose. It will not do to allow the bill to slumber in the committee room and let it be used for the purposes for which it has been used for the last six or eight years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the bill might be treated as having had but one reading to-day and the action to refer be reconsidered, and then the question would arise whether it should have a second reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object, then, to the second reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The action of referring to the Committee on Pensions will, without objection, be reconsidered, and the bill will lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I object. I hope the bill will be referred to the committee in the ordinary way, and that it will be promptly reported back and dealt with. I agree with the Senators who have spoken that it ought not to pass, but it is not a bill which is being considered on its merits, and it ought not to be denied the respect of ordinary treatment. The English people are discussing with great gravity this year the question of old-age pensions for all persons who are unable to support themselves.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the objection and will let the bill go to the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I will finish my sentence.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I know a good many very thoughtful, wise, and influential persons who are dealing with the subject in this country. A friend of mine in Massachusetts the other day, whose name would command the highest respect in the Senate, told me he was giving his time to a consideration of the subject. If that policy deserves respectful consideration in regard to any class of persons, it certainly deserves respectful consideration in regard to a class of persons a large part of whose life was spent in slavery, whose earnings and labors were given to the benefit of others and not their own.

I say this as not in the least supposing that the Congress of the United States will adopt such a policy, not in the least as indicating any favor to it myself, but I think it is something which deserves the ordinary treatment and that the bill should go to the committee. The Senator from New Hampshire can report it back to-morrow or as soon as the committee has met, and the Senate can express its opinion and that will stop the agitation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one word more in regard to this matter. I am very glad that the bill is to go to the committee. I think that is the proper procedure, and I will promise that so far as I am concerned it shall have early consideration.

Mr. President, before dismissing the subject, I wish to put in the RECORD a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions on the subject, bearing date February 4, 1899, showing that he has taken cognizance of this matter, and that he, in writing to the chairman of the committee, expresses the hope that the bill will not receive serious consideration. I will submit the letter without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be printed in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS, OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER,
Washington, February 4, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In the Fifty-fourth Congress a bill was introduced in the Senate that provided for pensioning the ex-slaves. Though I do not suppose it was ever thought of seriously, or intended in any way to give them pensions, it was published all over the South, and it has afforded occupation for many bad men to take advantage of the poor and ignorant negroes, and they form associations charging them 25 cents admission and 10 cents a month dues. I inclose you one of the certificates sent to me by one of the special examiners now on duty at Nashville, in my own State.

You can see what a fine field it opens up for bad men to operate in.

Very respectfully,

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the reversal of the former action of the Senate, the bill will be considered as referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JAMES AND WILLIAM CROOKS.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 297) for the relief of James and William Crooks, of Canada, erroneously referred to that committee, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that order will be granted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the pension claim of Wilson W. Brown (S. 4349) Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and transmitted to Daniel A. Dorsey, Kearney, Nebr., no adverse report having been made in the case.

REPORT ON FORESTRY IN SWEDEN.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 20,000 copies of the report on forestry in Sweden, made to the Department of State by Gen. C. C. Andrews, late Minister at Stockholm, be printed for the use of the Senate; the said report to be revised by the author.

EXPENSES OF VICE-PRESIDENT'S FUNERAL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by direction of the President pro tempore in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate, Garrett A. Hobart, at Paterson, N. J., on the 25th of November, 1899, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

CEUR D'ALENE MINING TROUBLES.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it has become a matter of record in the State of Idaho that Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, United States Army, together with the governor of Idaho, under date the 8th of May, 1890, officially announced to the mine owners of a portion of the Cœur d'Alene district, in Idaho, that their mines would be closed in case they employed men who belonged to a labor organization known as the Miners' Union; and

Whereas Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, United States Army, at that time in command of a detachment of United States soldiers at the Cœur d'Alene mines, compelled each miner given employment in said mines to sign a pledge renouncing forever all allegiance to the Miners' Union, and in addition each miner so employed was required to assert that he would never again seek membership in the Miners' Union; and

Whereas Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, United States Army, through some of his subordinate officers, under the opportunity afforded by a condition of martial law, is charged with brutal treatment of civilian prisoners: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate by what authority Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, United States Army, performed the acts recited in the foregoing preamble, and also to transmit to the Senate copies of all orders issued by his superiors to the said General Merriam or by the said General Merriam or any of his subordinates, and also copies of all official reports made in connection with the Cœur d'Alene mining troubles during the year 1899.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then let the resolution lie over until tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document for the information of the Senate a statement in regard to these matters made by Edward Boyce, president of the Western Federation of Miners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks that an order be made for the printing of a document which he submits.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to that request, but I also ask that General Merriam's report, made to the Secretary of War on this same subject, may be printed in the same document. I suppose there is no objection to that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object to its being printed in the same document, but I do not object to its being printed as a separate document.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask that the report of General Merriam on this same subject may be printed as a document. I send it to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. PETTIGREW. To that I do not object, but I do not wish to have it printed as part of the document I present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota requests that an order be made for the printing of a certain document which he submits, but which has not been read. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the order will be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I ask that General Merriam's report, which I have sent to the desk, may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. I desire to call up that resolution, Mr. President, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois calls from the table the resolution heretofore submitted by him; which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MASON December 6, 1899, as follows:

Whereas from the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other people to free themselves from European domination: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That we watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the South African Republic against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the war between monarchy and republicanism began in earnest July 4, 1776, and no treaty of peace has ever been concluded, nor ever will be, until the question is settled right. The monarchical trust company, though often quarreling among themselves, have always agreed on one thing, that a republic is a mistake because it threatens to make strained relations between God and the king; not that the king cares for himself, but has always been deeply fearful and extremely solicitous lest God should be worsted in the division of influence, territory, and trade. Notwithstanding this solemn pretense, it is noticeable in history that the king has never quite lost sight of his own interests, and has joined other kings and potentates, worshipping a different deity, to hold in check the foolish ambition of men to govern themselves. Thus early in the century did the Emperor of Russia assist the Turk in subduing the ambitious Greek, dividing the glory at their respective religious shrines and the plunder between themselves. It may not be inappropriate to read here the declaration of the Emperor and the answer made by Daniel Webster when he offered and supported a resolution similar to the one now before the Senate. I read the declaration of the Emperor of Russia at the opening of the monarchical trust. He said:

There can no longer be such a thing as an English, French, Russian, Prussian, or Austrian policy. There is henceforth but one policy which, for the safety of all, should be adopted both by people and kings. It was for me first to show myself convinced of the principles upon which I founded the alliance. An occasion offered itself, the rising in Greece. Nothing certainly could occur more to my interests, for the interests of my people, nothing more acceptable to my country, than a religious war in Turkey. But I have thought I have perceived in the troubles of the Morea the sign of revolution, and I have held back. Providence has not put under my command 800,000 soldiers to satisfy my ambition, but to protect religion, morality, and justice and to secure the prevalence of those principles of order on which human society rests. It may well be permitted that kings may have public alliances to defend themselves against secret enemies.

Let me read right here Mr. Webster's reply to that in supporting his resolution in favor of giving sympathy to the Greeks; and this, my colleagues will understand, while it is familiar to most of them, is simply to state the law of precedent, to show that the resolution I have offered is strictly in line with the established precedents of the United States of America. Answering the monarchical trust, Mr. Webster said:

The end and scope of this amalgamated policy is neither more nor less than this: To interfere, by force for any government, against any people who may resist it. Be the state of the people what it may, they shall not rise; be the government what it will, it shall not be opposed. The practical commentary has corresponded with the plain language of the text. Look at Spain, and at Greece. If men may not resist the Spanish Inquisition and the Turkish scimitar, what is there to which humanity must not submit? Stronger cases can never arise. Is it not proper for us at all times, is it not our duty at this time, to come forth and deny and condemn these monstrous principles? Where but here, and in one other place, are they likely to be resisted? They are advanced with equal coolness and boldness, and they are supported by immense power.

The timid will shrink and give way, and many of the brave may be compelled to yield to force. Human liberty may yet perhaps be obliged to repose its principal hopes on the intelligence and vigor of the Saxon race. As far as depends on us at least, I trust those hopes will not be disappointed, and that, to the extent which may consist with our own settled pacific policy, our opinions and sentiments may be brought to act on the right side and to the right end on an occasion which is in truth nothing less than a momentous question between an intelligent age full of knowledge, thirsting for improvement and quickened by a thousand impulses, on one side and the most arbitrary pretensions sustained by unprecedented power on the other.

But, we are asked, what interest have we? If I did not believe that we had an interest I should not have presented this resolution. In the struggle between democracy and royalty, the continuous war between the divine right of kings and the divine right of man, it would be cowardly for the great Republic to be silent. It never has been silent before. Let me read what President Monroe said in regard to the rising in Greece in his message December 3, 1822, a year before the speech of Mr. Webster in the House of Representatives. I read from the message of President Monroe. This was not making an entangling alliance or calling for the Army or the Navy. Monroe said in December, 1822:

The mention of Greece fills the mind with most exalted sentiments and arouses in our bosoms the best feelings of which our nature is susceptible. Superior skill and refinements in the arts, heroic gallantry in action, disinterested patriotism, enthusiastic zeal and devotion in favor of public and personal liberty are associated with our recollections of ancient Greece. That such a country should have been overwhelmed and so long hidden, as it were, from the world under a gloomy despotism has been a cause of unceasing and deep regret to generous minds for ages past. It was natural, therefore, that the reappearance of those people in their original character, contending in favor of their liberties, should produce that great excitement and sympathy in their favor which have been so signally displayed throughout the United States. A strong hope is entertained that these people will recover their independence and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth.

But, Mr. President, why should I attempt to show our interest? I must read again from this speech of Mr. Webster, so familiar to most of you, to gather what he felt was our interest. Mr. Webster spoke—and I read from his speeches, volume 1, page 251—as follows:

It may now be required of me to show what interest we have in resisting this new system.

Not that a monarchy was new, but that a combination of monarchies that were to repress republics was new. But, says Mr. Webster:

What is it to us, it may be asked, upon what principles or what pretenses the European governments assert a right of interfering in the affairs of their neighbors? The thunder, it may be said, rolls at a distance. The wide Atlantic is between us and danger, and however others may suffer we shall remain safe.

I think it a sufficient answer to this to say that we are one of the nations; that we have an interest, therefore, in the preservation of that system of national law and national intercourse which has hitherto subsisted so beneficially for all. Our system of government, it should be remembered, is throughout founded on principles utterly hostile to the new code, and it we remain undisturbed by its operation we shall owe our security either to our situation or our spirit. The enterprising character of the age, our own active commercial spirit, the great increase which has taken place in the intercourse between civilized and commercial states, have necessarily connected us with the nations of the earth and given us a high concern in the preservation of those salutary principles upon which that intercourse is founded. We have as clear an interest in international law as individuals have in the laws of society.

But apart from the soundness of the policy on the ground of direct interest, we have, sir, a duty connected with this subject which I trust we are willing to perform. What do we not owe to the cause of civil and religious liberty, to the principle of lawful resistance, to the principle that society has a right to partake in its own government? As the leading republic of the world, living and breathing in these principles and advanced by their operation with unequalled rapidity in our career, shall we give our consent to bring them into disrepute and disgrace? It is neither ostentation nor boasting to say that there lie before this country in immediate prospect a great extent and height of power. We are borne along toward this without effort, and not always with even a full knowledge of the rapidity of our own motion. Circumstances which never combined before have cooperated in our favor, and a mighty current is setting us forward, which we could not resist, even if we would, and which, while we would stop to make an observation and take the sun, has set us at the end of the operation far in advance of the place where we commenced it. Does it not become us, then, is it not a duty imposed on us, to give our weight to the side of liberty and justice, to let mankind know that we are not tired of our own institutions, and to protest against the asserted power of altering at pleasure the law of the civilized world?

But we are told that England was our friend in the war with Spain. How? Her people were our friends because her people are a Christian people; her Government has never been our friend except for purposes of its own. I have no desire to twist the lion's tail, but truth compels the statement, so far as our interests are concerned, for the last half century the Government of England and the people of England have been divided. You remember 1861? The Government did all it could to divide the Union, but the brave, starving weavers refused to resolve against us, saying they would starve before they would say a word for slavery. But even suppose she were to-day our best friend, are we to be silent and uphold a wrong in consideration of that friendship? If she had helped us do an honorable thing, are we bound to help her do a dishonorable thing, like pulling down the flag of a republic and putting the flag of monarchy in its place? Are we to trade our moral influence among the nations of the world for a friendly growl? Are we to become the lion's whelp; or has the eagle glutted itself with carrion and agreed to screech no more until the lion roars? We Republicans are charged with a secret alliance with England. It can not be true, and the vote which this or a similar resolution receives will answer the charge.

Understand me, this is no declaration of war, no involving of our Army or Navy. The American doctrine is, and has always been since the days of Monroe, to interfere, by force, if necessary, when monarchies made encroachment in America, and in all other controversies in Europe to keep aloof, but never to hesitate to speak our mind in favor of the people as against the king. The proof is in the Monroe doctrine, well known to you as applied to America, and the Monroe message, just read, expressing hope for Grecian independence. The reason for this difference is clearly stated by Mr. Webster, as follows:

The same reason that would authorize us to protest against unwarrantable combinations to interfere between Spain and her former colonies would authorize us equally to protest if the same combination were directed against the smallest state in Europe, although our duty to ourselves, our policy, and wisdom might indicate very different courses as fit to be pursued by us in the two cases.

Four years before, Henry Clay, in the House of Representatives, speaking for the recognition of Buenos Ayres, said:

He would not seek to force upon other nations our principles and our liberty if they did not want them. He would not disturb the repose even of a detestable despotism. But if an abused and oppressed people willed their freedom; if they sought to establish it; if, in truth, they had established it, we had a right, as a sovereign power, to notice the fact and to act as circumstances and our interest required.

Almost the exact language of Mr. Webster.

He would say, in the language of the venerated Father of his Country—

This is a quotation from President Washington. I find it in the speech of Mr. Clay, but I do not know from what State paper it was taken, and there is nothing in Mr. Clay's speech to show. But the quotation from Washington is as follows:

He would say, in the language of the venerated Father of his Country, "Born in a land of liberty, my anxious recollections, my sympathetic feelings, and my best wishes are irresistibly excited whenever, in any country, I see an oppressed nation unfurl the banners of freedom."

Both Webster and Clay were members of the House of Representatives at the time of making the speeches quoted from, one appealing for recognition and encouragement for Greece and one for Buenos Ayres. It would seem that Washington, Monroe, Webster, and Clay were enough to appeal to to establish the American doctrine; and I purpose to show briefly that we have followed it ever since. We have never received a favor from any nation of the world, great or small, that kept the moral conscience of this people still when a great wrong was being committed, from the time of the Greek revolution to the war with Spain in regard to Cuba.

Then we are told—I am told—if it does not involve our ships and Army, and we intend to use no force, we can do no possible good. Once again hear Webster on the good we can do in establishing public opinion. We can at least speak from our consciences here and help to establish public opinion, but it does not involve the Army or the Navy. I read from the same volume at page 253:

It may, in the next place, be asked, perhaps, Supposing all this to be true, what can we do? Are we to go to war? Are we to interfere in the Greek cause or any other European cause? Are we to endanger our pacific relations? No; certainly not. What, then, the question recurs, remains for us? If we will not endanger our own peace, if we will neither furnish armies nor navies to the cause which we think the just one, what is there within our power?

Sir, this reasoning mistakes the age. The time has been, indeed, when fleets and armies, and subsidies were the principal reliances even in the best cause. But, happily for mankind, there has arrived a great change in this respect. Moral causes come into consideration in proportion as the progress of knowledge is advanced, and the public opinion of the civilized world is rapidly gaining an ascendancy over more brutal forces. It is already able to oppose the most formidable obstruction to the progress of injustice and oppression, and as it grows more intelligent and more intense it will be more and more formidable. It may be silenced by military power, but it can not be conquered. It is elastic, irrepressible, and invulnerable to the weapons of ordinary warfare. It is that impassable, unextinguishable enemy of mere violence and arbitrary rule, which, like Milton's angels—

Vital in every part, . . .
Can not but by annihilating die.

Until this be propitiated or satisfied, it is vain for power to talk of triumphs or of repose, no matter what fields are desolated, what fortresses surrendered, what armies subdued, or what provinces overrun. In the history of the year that has passed by us, and in the instance of unhappy Spain, we have seen the vanity of all triumphs in the cause which violates the general sense of justice of the civilized world. It is nothing that the troops of France have passed from the Pyrenees to Cadiz; it is nothing that an unhappy and prostrate nation has fallen before them; it is nothing that arrests, and confiscation, and execution sweep away the little remnant of national resistance.

There is an enemy that still exists to check the glory of these triumphs. It follows the conqueror back to the very scene of his ovations. It calls upon him to take notice that Europe, though silent, is yet indignant. It shows him that the scepter of his victory is yet a barren scepter; that it shall confer neither joy nor honor, but shall molder to dry ashes in his grasp. In the midst of his exaltation, it pierces his ear with the cry of injured justice; it denounces against him the indignation of an enlightened and civilized age. It turns to bitterness the cup of his rejoicing, and wounds him with the sting which belongs to the consciousness of having outraged the opinion of mankind.

If it was important then, under our condition at that time, how much more important now? Have we not "progressed," as suggested by Webster? Then it took months to communicate with the nations of the world; now in minutes we estimate the time. We are nearer the world and read its daily doings before breakfast. Then electricity was almost a myth and hid within the ground or wildly flew among the clouds. Now we are grown more tolerant of political and religious differences. Now we burn no witches. Now we sell no slaves. Now we know that both great parties have followed the "American policy," as Webster called it, and declared for forcible intervention for humanity's sake. Now have we cleared our decks for action, putting out our men and money, asking no territory, no money, nothing, only that liberty may come to the children of men.

Oh, Mr. President, if we would speak, and speak quickly, it would sting the politicians who brought on the war of greed for gold and cheer the poor brave Dutch defender of his home.

Mr. President, if Senators need any more proof of what the American policy is, I beg them to read the speeches of Webster and Clay; to read the correspondence between our Government and Austria, when we did all we could to encourage Hungary in 1850; to read our own action as to the Armenians and the Turk, or, later, our own intervention between Cuba and Spain.

Mr. President, I desire to insert here, without reading, the resolution of sympathy for Brazil, offered by that distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. Sherman, and the letter of Secretary Blaine, which speaks for itself.

Joint resolution congratulating the people of the United States of Brazil on their adoption of a republican form of government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States of America congratulate the people of Brazil on their just and peaceful assumption of the powers, duties, and responsibilities of self-government, based upon the free consent of the governed, and in their recent adoption of a republican form of government.

A kind word, in line of precedent, as Senator Sherman said, and it was passed in this Chamber, on a roll call, without a dissenting vote (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fifty-first Congress, first session, page 1229); passed House of Representatives unanimously, on motion of my colleague, Mr. HITT (same RECORD, page 1282).

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 23, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith for your information a copy of a dispatch No. 100, dated the 23d ultimo, from our consul-general at Rio de Janeiro, inclosing the translation of a joint resolution of the Congress of Brazil expressing the thanks of the people of that country for the joint resolution of the Congress of the United States, approved February 19, 1890, congratulating the people of Brazil on their adoption of a republican form of government.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, JAMES G. BLAINE.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

No. 100.] CONSULATE-GENERAL UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Rio de Janeiro, January 22, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to send you the following important inclosures: (1) The expression of cordial regard to the United States of America for their expression of opinion looking to the maintenance of the republican institutions established in Brazil and the happiness and prosperity of the Brazilian people thereunder; said joint resolutions were passed with tremendous applause during my sitting in the diplomatic gallery.

The death of Gen. Benjamin Constant, minister of public instruction, is generally deplored. He was a man of great ability, unyielding devotion to republicanism, and of proverbial integrity of character.

(c) The cabinet of ministers have resigned, giving as a reason the passing of the constitution to its second reading, which will, when promulgated, oblige them all to resign as incompatible; but the real reason is that they refuse to approve a decree granting a guaranty of interest on some millions required by the generalissimo to build a new port, that of Torres, in the State of Rio Grande do Sul, and moreover the fact that all the ministers were determined to place bounds to what they call the ambition of Generalissimo Decodoro.

I am proud to recognize and transmit to my Government the fact of a growing sentiment of regard and fraternal feeling on the part of the youngest of all American republics toward the oldest of all. Such indications in future I shall watch with untiring interest.

I have the honor, sir, to be your obedient servant.

O. H. DOCKERY, Consul-General.

Hon. WILLIAM F. WHARTON,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MESSAGE.

The Constitutional Congress of the United States of Brazil, at its first session, opened and effected at the city of Rio de Janeiro on the 15th of November, in the year 1890, first year of the Republic of Brazil:

JOINT RESOLUTION.

The Senate and the Chamber of Deputies of the United States of Brazil, met together as a constituent assembly, have resolved:

To express by means of this message, in the name of the people of Brazil to the people of the United States of America, the feelings of gratitude inspired in their breasts by the friendly terms of the highly honorable message of congratulation voted and adopted by the Congress of the United States:

To affirm once again and by the present means the sentiments of union and fraternity which bind the people of Brazil to the American nation, in the earnest desire to maintain and honor the institution of a republican form of government in Brazil, endeavoring to secure by the happiness and prosperity of the Brazilian family the peace and prosperity of all nations.

Here is a resolution offered by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] (see RECORD, pages 36 and 959-965):

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the people of the United States of America through their representatives in Congress assembled, convey to the President and people of the Republic of Transvaal their earnest congratulations upon their success in establishing free representative government, republican in form, and in their opposition to any foreign power that denies to them the full enjoyment of these rights and liberties.

The people of America having realized, through the favor of the God of Nations, the blessings of government based upon the consent of the governed, entertain with confidence the pleasing hope and belief that the principles of self-government will be securely established through the influence of the Republic of France, in her colonies, and of the Republics of Liberia and the Transvaal, founded by the people in Africa; and that those Republics will foster and give firm support to the peaceful progress of Christian civilization in the new and vast field now being opened to the commerce and institutions of all the nations of the earth throughout that great continent.

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to communicate this action of Congress to the President of the Republic of Transvaal.

The following report by my distinguished colleague [Mr. CULLOM] was adopted (see RECORD, pages 36 and 959-965):

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the supplementary treaty of Berlin of July 13, 1878, between the Ottoman Empire and Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Russia, contains the following provisions:

"LXI.

"The Sublime Porte undertakes to carry out without further delay the ameliorations and reforms demanded by local requirements in the provinces inhabited by the Armenians, and to guarantee their security against the Circassians and Kurds.

"It will periodically make known the steps taken to this effect to the powers, and will superintend their application.

"LXII.

"The Sublime Porte having expressed the wish to maintain the principle of religious liberty, to give it the widest scope, the contracting parties take note of this spontaneous declaration.

"In no part of the Ottoman Empire shall difference of religion be alleged against an individual as a ground for exclusion or incapacity as regards the discharge of civil and political rights, admission to the public service, functions, and honors, and the exercise of the different professions and industries.

"All persons shall be admitted, without distinction of religion, to give evidence before the tribunals.

"Liberty and the outward exercise of all forms of worship are assured to all, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchical organization of the various communions or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

"The right of official protection by the diplomatic and consular agents of the powers in Turkey is recognized both as regards the above-mentioned persons and their religious, charitable, and other establishments in the holy places; and

Whereas the intent and object of the above-cited provisions of said treaty are to place the Christian subjects of the Porte under the protection of the other signatories thereto, and to secure to such Christian subjects full liberty of religious worship and belief, the equal benefit of the laws, and all the privileges and immunities belonging to any subjects of the Turkish Empire; and Whereas by said treaty the Christian powers, parties thereto, having established, under the consent of Turkey, their right to accomplish and secure the above-recited objects; and

Whereas the American people, in common with all Christian people everywhere, have beheld with horror the recent appalling outrages and massacres of which the Christian population of Turkey have been made the victims: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is an imperative duty, in the interest of humanity, to express the earnest hope that the European concert brought about by the treaty referred to may speedily be given its just effect in such decisive measures as shall stay the hand of fanaticism and lawless violence, and as shall secure to the unoffending Christians of the Turkish Empire all the rights belonging to them both as men and Christians and as beneficiaries of the explicit provisions of the treaty above recited.

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate these resolutions to the Governments of Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Russia.

Resolved further, That the Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives concurring, will support the President in the most vigorous action he may take for the protection and security of American citizens in Turkey, and to obtain redress for injuries committed upon the persons or property of such citizens.

On the Armenian resolutions the question was not raised whether we were interfering in European politics. We did not seem to be afraid to offend any of the powers. Gentlemen spoke freely. There was no let or hindrance to the opinion of Senators. No one feared to express an opinion upon the subject.

Speaking to these resolutions, the distinguished Senator from Maine, the President of the Senate [Mr. FAYE], said:

Sir, the British rulers are no friends of ours.

I call attention to the fact that he took the same position that most Senators do—that there is a vast difference between the English people, who are our friends, and the English rulers or English Government, who never have been our friends. I ask gentlemen who shall reply to me to remember the difference. The Senator from Maine further said:

Now she is sitting quietly by seeing these Armenians, for a solid year, murdered because they were Christians, when she was one of the very agencies agreeing to protect their lives or to compel Turkey to do it. And she had the power in her hands any day to do it. So I say, regardless of what Great Britain might have thought, if I had had my way, Congress would have memorialized Russia at once to take possession of Armenia and the United States would back her in the doing of it. (Page 962.)

That might have meant war. The resolution I offer means nothing of the kind.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution (see Report No. 393):

Whereas the President of the United States, in his message to Congress, says that—

"The rich and populous valley of the Congo is being opened to commerce by a society called the International African Association, of which the King of the Belgians is the president and a citizen of the United States the chief executive officer. Large tracts of territory have been ceded to the association by native chiefs, roads have been opened, steamboats placed on the river, and the nuclei of states established at twenty-two stations under one flag, which offers freedom to commerce and prohibits the slave trade. The objects of the society are philanthropic. It does not aim at permanent political control, but seeks the neutrality of the valley. The United States can not be indifferent to this work nor to the interests of their citizens involved in it. It may become advisable for us to cooperate with other commercial powers in promoting the rights of trade and residence in the Congo Valley free from the interference or political control of any one nation."

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That prompt action is recommended to the President toward securing unrestricted freedom of access and traffic to our citizens in their legitimate enterprises in the Congo Basin, from its mouth to its sources:

1. By taking such measures as may be necessary to assure protection to our citizens and their trade in the territories called the Free States of the Congo, acquired from native chiefs by the Committee of the Upper Congo, and under the flag of the African International Association, freedom from customs dues, the right to trade, to reside, and acquire property, whether as traders or missionaries, freedom of religious belief, and freedom from the slave trade.

2. By reasserting and applying the policy of previous Administrations denying rights of sovereignty and of intervention by any power, great or small, to the mouth of the Congo, the gateway of central Africa, and by taking such steps, in concert with other commercial powers, as shall assure freedom of passage, by land and water, through that region, unrestrained by any impositions, to all peoples in their legitimate pursuits, and which shall prevent the further deportation therefrom of Africans for forced labor in any form.

I wish, very briefly, to call your attention, Mr. President, and the attention of Senators to an article upon the Congo Free State, by Theodore S. Woolsey, found in Johnson's Universal Cyclopaedia. I am endeavoring merely to open the case at this time. The extract is as follows:

The United States led the way. The Committee on Foreign Relations reported to the Forty-eighth Congress that the acts of cession of the native chiefs were within their rights and that the association could lawfully accept them. This Government, accordingly, April 22, 1884, recognized the International Association of the Congo as a sovereign and independent power under the title of the Congo Free State. Within a year Austria, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Russia, Spain, and Sweden followed the example of the United States.

That shows again the precedent; it shows the habit, if you please to call it such, in similar cases.

I will not cumber the RECORD with more precedents at present, but urge you to remember the course we took in the case of Spain in Cuba.

Gentlemen may say: "Cuba was in America, on our continent, near our home; and under the Monroe doctrine we had an absolute right to interfere, because it involved our own peace of mind; it was near our door." I again call the attention of gentlemen who desire to answer me and to speak upon the other side of the question to the opinion of Monroe and Clay and Webster, that the same outrage would call for the same protest whether in Europe or America, although our course of conduct might be different, based on policy and interest of our own country.

Mr. President, I do not at this time intend to go at length into the controversy that brought on the war. Late official information is hard to get, for the reason that public documents for this year, usually issued by Great Britain, which will show the official diplomatic correspondence, have for some reason not been sent to our National Library, although expected for some time in due course of mail. It may be that they have been stopped at Ladysmith.

I have here both of the conventions which will be under discussion: I have here the treaties as they were written and signed; and I charge that under the then existing relations between Great Britain and the Republic Great Britain had no legal right to raise any question of the local conduct of the Boers as to laws of suffrage; that Great Britain knew it, and only did it to aggravate and goad on the Republic to war that they might despoil their land, own their homes, rule their people, and absorb the rich mines of South Africa.

In other words, it is a fight to control South Africa, and the only way England could do it was to threaten, bulldoze, browbeat, and interfere with the Dutchman until, out of sheer humiliation and desperation, he was driven to fight, and then turn on the army of the great nation, and meantime cry to the nations of the world: "See us poor English. We did not shoot first. Please give us your sympathy. We are for liberty. Our flag is there." Let the distinguished lilliputian statesman, rattling around in Gladstone's shoes, trying to undo his work and break his promises, be assured that he is deceiving no one, except possibly himself. Let me read, briefly, the statement of Justin McCarthy.

I read from his Life of Gladstone. It is a construction of the convention of 1884 and also that of 1881. This, rather, is his construction of the convention of 1881:

Peace was established on fair and honorable conditions. The Transvaal Republic was restored with a British protectorate against foreign nations and foreign invasion and with a British high commission, but with the entire local and national self-government for which the Boers, to do them justice, had fought so well. Mr. Gladstone, of course, was denounced by all the jingoes of England. They raged against him because he had allowed the curtain of this drama to fall upon what they called the triumph of the Boers. Mr. Gladstone went on his course unheeding. He had asked of his own heart and mind and conscience what was the right thing to do, and he had done it. It was a brave act. But it was an act only in keeping with the whole of Mr. Gladstone's career.

Mr. President, I have before me the debate in Parliament between Sir Michael Hicks-Beach and Mr. Gladstone, on July 25, 1881, when a motion of censure against the Gladstone government was pending and about to be voted upon. Let me read a few extracts from Mr. Gladstone's speech. I assume that if any gentleman opposes the offering of sympathy to the Boers, I assume that if any gentleman objects to offering sympathy to the Republic, he will give some reason; that he will endeavor to show that the Republic at least is in the wrong in some particular and that the monarchy is in the right, unless he shall take the broad ground that the American policy as established by the fathers and construed by Monroe, Webster, and Clay is a mistake, or that we have changed the American policy for some good reason. I now read from Mr. Gladstone:

In 1852 we solemnly engaged to respect the independence of the Transvaal.

Mind you, this goes back of the convention of 1884.

In 1852 we solemnly engaged to respect the independence of the Transvaal. That was by a treaty formed between us and the representatives of the Boer population. What right had we to infringe that treaty? What right had we to make ourselves the judges of that treaty, and then set up the miserable plea, in the dispatch of the right honorable gentleman opposite, that there was an implied reservation in that treaty—an implied reservation which made us parties competent to deal with it as we did deal with it?

I propose to show you that every man who has written for an American magazine within the past six months insists upon an implied reservation in the convention of 1881 or the convention of 1884. Gladstone further says:

Why, sir, what a doctrine to apply to the whole formation of treaties that are to bind nations together, and the very essence of which is that no party can, under any circumstances, have any title to import into a treaty, of his own motion, that which the treaty does not contain.

An elementary principle of treaties as it is an elementary principle of contracts. Who can read unmoved the brave, unselfish words of Gladstone, who was brave enough to confess the errors of his own country and tried to teach us that true statesmanship consists in endeavoring to have his country do right?

We had no right—

I again read from Gladstone—

We had no right to break the Sand River convention except on the ground of offense on the part of the Boers against ourselves; but, unfortunately, we broke it upon pleas relating to matters of remote apprehension and policy which invested us with no title at all to deal in a way with such a solemn instrument so contracted. If we are to talk of loyalty, if we are to talk of honor, if we are to talk of humiliation, if we are to talk of blushing, it is those who deal with these solemn instruments in a manner so unscrupulous who ought to be very careful how they throw these stringent and formidable terms at their opponents.

I ought to say that the resolution of censure did not pass. It was defeated by a large majority, and I think for the reasons given in Mr. Gladstone's closing remarks as his reason for not continuing the war. I ought also to say at this point, as a matter of fairness to him, and as a part of our recollection of him, that it was charged that he was a coward; that he had settled the war at a time when the British arms had been defeated, whereas the record is that before the great battles he had sent the proposition of compromise; and only those in politics in England to-day, judging from their speeches, who would throw a charge of cowardice upon the life and character of Gladstone, are carrying on this war to-day, because they say it ought to have been carried on then, notwithstanding this solemn contract of the Government and the solemn treaty made in 1881 following the war.

But if it shall appear that there was an element not of cowardice in Gladstone, but of discretion, the morning's dispatches would indicate that it was a very sound discretion.

England by solemn act in her own Parliament sustained the action of the Gladstone party in settling and making the convention of 1881. I read another short extract from the speech of Mr. Gladstone:

We should have made this war first on the Transvaal, but too probably in the end upon a very large portion, nay, on the whole of the Dutch population of South Africa, which numbers two to one of the English.

Does this sound prophetic in view of the fact that President Steyn has joined the Boers? Does it sound anything like a prophetic discretion?

We should have made the war at an enormous cost, with immense difficulty, and with the strong disapproval of the civilized world. But what should we have made it for, and when we had ended the war what should we have done? We should have done the very thing we have now done. We should not have wished to keep under the sovereignty of the British Crown these unwilling and reluctant subjects. We should have been glad to give them the very liberty we have conferred on them. We have attained that end without bloodshed, for the bloodshed that occurred, as is well known, was due to local counsels. This is what we have done: We have chosen to attain the end we had in view and to confer liberties which we knew we ought to confer without carrying a most painful and dishonorable warfare, a warfare which would have done nothing to increase the general fame or credit of England.

Let the gentleman who answers me to-day tell me the political or the military or the historical difference between that war and the war now progressing. Broken treaties then; the same to-day, as it was even when they broke the Sand River convention of 1852.

Reading again from Mr. Gladstone:

Sir, these are the grounds on which we have proceeded in the Transvaal. Our case is summed up in this: We have endeavored to cast aside all considerations of false shame, and we have felt that we were strong enough to put aside these considerations of false shame without fear of entailing upon our country any sacrifice; we have endeavored to do right and to eschew wrong, and we have done that in matters involving alike the lives of thousands and the honor and character of our country, and whatever may be the opinion of gentlemen opposite, we believe we are supported, not only by the general convictions of Parliament, but by those of the country. From the remotest corner of Anglo-Saxon America have come back to us echoes of the resolution we have taken—favoring and approving echoes, recognizing in the policy of the Government a higher ambition than that which looks for military triumph or territorial aggrandizement, an ambition which seeks to signalize itself by walking in the plain and simple ways of right and justice, and which desires never to build up empire except in the happiness of the governed.

I have read this last part to show what Webster meant years ago by public opinion and its power above armies and fleets. "From far America, favoring and approving echoes," said Mr. Gladstone. To approve the course of Gladstone is to disapprove the present course of the English Government.

"Approving echoes," said Gladstone. What echoes will her present ministry hear?

I think at the opening of this debate I ought, in fairness, to note some of the defenses sought to be made by the writers for England in our American magazines. One writer in this month's Atlantic Monthly assures us that it was very difficult to become a voter in the Republic, and sets out the manner in full of becoming a burgher. It is practically the same routine required in Illinois for first and second papers, and the only complaint made in Illinois is that citizenship is most too cheap. They are charged with holding them twenty-one years. Some people we hold for two hundred and fifty years and never admit them to citizenship. We allow no one to question our family affairs, either. But that statement is not true, and I propose to show by the contract and by the law itself that every statement that could possibly be worked into the newspapers and magazines of this country has been introduced which could, by falsehood, prejudice the people of this country against the Boers struggling for self-government, and uphold the English Government, which is not being upheld by the English people. You will not forget, I suppose, that they have not recruited a regiment in Scotland and that the Irish congratulated the mules who deserted and joined the Boers.

President Kruger says:

The difficulty with the Englishmen here is that they want to be burghers and at the same time retain their English citizenship.

Suppose they or any other country should propose that to us; suppose any man should ask to vote here and help run this Government and not renounce his allegiance to his former sovereign. There is not a school boy in Illinois twelve years of age who would not say to him, "If you vote under this flag you must fight where you vote." I say to you now that no nation but a professional bully would seek to have any other nation in the world permit her citizens to become citizens but not subjects. If they would make the request here, we would give them the same answer that Kruger gave them at Modder River and at Ladysmith. Truly, the Lion hath a taste for blood in weak veins, and an overwhelming penchant for gold mines.

This writer in the Atlantic Monthly—and I think he makes the strongest plea that is made for England in any of the current magazines I have been able to procure within the last two months—states more strongly than anyone else whose writings I have been able to read the English position or pretense. Before I read his construction of the convention of 1881 and 1884 I ought to inform Senators that it is not in the advertising columns of the magazine. He says:

This status depends upon the fact and extent of British suzerainty under the two conventions of 1881 and 1884. The convention of 1881 consisted of a preamble and a number of articles. The preamble grants self-government to the inhabitants of the Transvaal in these words:

"Complete self-government, subject to the suzerainty of Her Majesty, to the inhabitants of the Transvaal territory, upon certain terms and conditions and subject to certain reservations and limitations."

Now, I take this to mean that on certain terms and conditions—that is, the laying down of arms, and so on—self-government was to be granted to the people of the Transvaal under the suzerainty of the Queen, but that this self-government was to be subject to certain reservations and limitations. In other words, the reservations and limitations did not refer to the suzerainty, but to the self-government. It was not to be unconditional self-government, but self-government with certain specified limitations, in addition to the general limitations of the Queen's suzerainty.

As there can be no question as to the assertion of the suzerainty in the convention of 1881, there remains only one point to be dealt with—whether the suzerainty persists in the convention of 1884.

And the way he disposes of that proposition is something marvellous:

Any doubt as to the existence of the suzerainty would at once be removed by an examination of the circumstances under which the convention of 1884 was signed. The Transvaal delegates requested the British Government to do away with suzerainty by making the proposed convention a treaty between two powers. This the Government refused to do, on the ground that the Transvaal was not in fact an independent power, nor was it intended that it should be represented as such. So the issue was definitely raised before the convention was signed, and the Transvaal delegates signed the convention knowing the feelings of Her Majesty's Government on the matter.

And so he closes his whole legal argument of the right of England under the convention of 1884 with the broad statement that suzerainty was contained in the convention of 1881 and it persisted or continued in the convention of 1884, although not a word was spoken of it in the convention of 1884.

Was ever so strained and absurd construction given to a convention? He says, first, that the words "certain terms and conditions" in the preamble puts a limitation on the words "complete self-government." It is in the preamble. No article is cited to show any limitation, and the whole convention is passed over by this strained and unnatural construction. This also notwithstanding the construction of Gladstone, who made the treaty, and the definition of Florence McCarthy, just read. But follow him. Having fixed, by mere dictum, the limitations, conditions, etc., in the convention of 1881, he assures us blandly that the only point left is, "Did the suzerainty persist in the convention of 1884?"

Then he tells us that before it was signed there was correspondence between the two powers whereby England re-used to say that the Transvaal State was a government and entitled to be treated as such, and that, therefore, the Boers knew the intention of the Queen's Government and are bound by that hidden power which they soon demolished when they sought to assert by mere force of words and force of guns a change in the very terms of the Sand River convention.

Assuming the writer in the magazine quoted to be correct, that the convention of 1881, which I have here, gave "complete self-government" subject to certain conditions or limitations, will any Senator contend that after granting this "complete self-government" there could be any limitations except those contained in the convention itself?

I ask you, gentlemen, if anyone is to do me the honor or kindness to reply to this suggestion, Will you contend upon the floor of the Senate that there were any limitations in the convention that were not shown by the convention itself? It is safe to say that no lawyer will so contend. Even the writer mentioned would not so contend had he read the agreement (convention) as signed by Kruger, as follows: "We agree to all the above conditions," thus leaving it absolutely impossible for England to insert bodily limitations which she had theretofore done in the other convention and of which Gladstone so bitterly complained in the lines I have quoted. Mind you, I am speaking of the convention of 1881.

The convention of 1881 above mentioned contained all the powers granted to England as suzerain. These powers will be found in article 2 of the convention of 1881, page 903, State Papers of Great Britain, No. 72, as follows: "(a) Right to appoint British resident, duties thereafter defined, etc.; (b) right to move troops through the State in times of war, and (c) control of the external relations of the State, including the conclusion of treaties." There are in all thirty-three articles in the convention, and I respectfully defy anyone to show any authority to mix in or control the internal affairs of the young Republic, as I shall shortly show they have done. But it is said the convention of 1884 amended and limited the convention of 1881. Let us examine that. It will be found at page 5, State Papers, volume 75. The preamble recites that this convention "shall, when ratified by the Volksraad of the South African Republic, be substituted for the articles in the convention 1881." It was signed in February, 1884, and ratified by the Congress of the Republic August 8, 1884. It then became the substituted and not the amended convention. There is no direct or indirect assumption by England in preamble or article asserting power as suzerain. The suzerainty in its broad sense does not "persist" in the convention of 1884, and even the clause in the convention of 1881 keeping control of all foreign relations is eliminated, so that the Republic could make treaties with the Orange Free State and with any tribes, north or south, without the approval of Her Majesty.

I also want to call attention to the fact that the so-called convention of 1884 partakes more of the nature of a treaty between the two powers. The signatures of Kruger and his associates follow that of Sir Hercules Robinson, the Queen's commissioner, instead of a poor little acceptance signed separately by Kruger and his associates. The "suzerainty" is omitted, and the name of one of the parties is changed from the Transvaal State to the "South African Republic." The provision for change is made in this solemn convention, which amounts to a treaty, and I insist that in no part of the convention or treaty, call it what you will, is found the authority of England to interfere in the internal or local matters of the Republic as they did.

After reading the two conventions you will see how almost childish it appears to say that the suzerainty continued or persisted in the convention of 1884, because in the correspondence preceding its execution the Republic had notice of the claim of Great Britain; this in violation of the elementary principle of law that all claims, tenders, and views are merged in the written instrument and are supposed to have been waived if not in the written instrument, which alone shows the points on which the minds met. Even a court of equity will not permit the changing of a written contract unless it is shown that the part complained of was there by mistake of both parties or was inserted by fraud.

I only refer to this magazine writer just one moment more, so that he may answer his own argument—to let him answer his whole defense of British crime in South Africa. He says, and I quote almost his closing words:

The question really at issue between the Transvaal and Great Britain is that of supremacy in South Africa.

That is it, Mr. President. We have got the truth at last from a writer in an American magazine on the English side. The question is one of supremacy.

I ask, in the name of common justice, Mr. President, what right has England to be supreme in South Africa after signing the two solemn conventions which I have quoted? She has not the same right that she had to be supreme in our colonies in 1776. She has the same right, Mr. President, that I have to be supreme in your home, or that you have to be supreme in mine.

Then, to briefly state the point, the friends of England claim in American papers and magazines that at the opening of the present trouble, with which my resolution deals, England was suzerain of the South African Republic because she was suzerain of the Transvaal State under the convention of 1881, although the convention of 1884, which fixed the status of the two parties, does not mention suzerainty in any place, and was a substitute and not an amended convention. I respectfully claim that the convention of 1881 was by the very terms of the convention of 1884 abrogated, and all its terms and conditions ceased to exist, as if it never had been, on the 8th of August, and that even if the term suzerain as contained in the convention of 1881 gave in its broad sense a power to England to interfere in the local government of the Transvaal State, no such unlimited or concealed power rests in England by the convention of 1884; that therefore at the time of the breaking out of the present trouble the powers of Great Britain were limited to the article in the convention of 1884.

It is to be understood that whatever powers she had she had by the convention of 1884, and that to go back to the convention of 1881 and seek to insert in the convention of 1884 powers that existed in the convention of 1881 because they were in the convention of 1881 is neither fair nor honest, because by the very terms of the convention of 1884 it became a substituted convention between the two powers, and not the amended convention.

Mr. President, I think I have made that point clear to gentlemen who have done me the kindness to listen. I did not expect to have the attention of many upon this subject in the Chamber. I only ask a fair hearing for the resolution which I have presented. I purpose to get it; I expect to get it. I say now that any justification of the course of England at the present time can only be had upon the basis that the convention of 1884 is not the contract between the parties and it does not state the true status of the parties, and that for the benefit of England you must insert, in violation of the elementary law of treaties, the powers that were not contained in the convention.

What better proof can I show you than to show that Great Britain herself did not dream of any such power. She simply said, So many Englishmen are complaining I can't bother with all. I'll just change the map and the laws of the Republic and assuage the English grievance at wholesale, and at the same time gratify the longings of my liberty-loving soul for gold mines.

At the Bloemfontein conference, held May in this year of our Lord, between the British high commissioner and President Kruger—I wish I had time and opportunity to read it all; it is reported in shorthand and opens on page 14 of Blue Book, entitled "South African Republic Correspondence," marked (C 9404), and I shall also have occasion to read from similar Blue Book, marked same (C 9415).

The two opening pages are interesting—it is the efforts of two diplomats sparring for an opening—interesting to note the directness of Kruger and the indirectness of the high commissioner.

Hear the President:

So as not to confuse matters, I understand from his excellency—

That is, the high commissioner from the English Government—that it is not his wish to give orders in internal matters.

I am addressing the Senate to the proposition that England herself claimed no right to interfere in the internal affairs of the Transvaal Republic or the South African Republic. The President said this to him at the opening, after having called attention to the fact that the English soldiers were gathering on the border; and if Senators shall stand on this floor in opposition to this resolution and say that certain rights left in the power of England to interfere in internal affairs I ask them to read the statement of their own representative at the time of this meeting and conference with Kruger in July of this year:

So as not to confuse matters, I understand from his excellency that it is not his wish to give orders in internal matters, but to give me friendly hints, to which I am prepared to listen, as in the case of Bunn last year. I would like his excellency to give any point he would like discussed. I do this because his excellency does not give orders or commands, but has entered into the conference in a friendly spirit.

HIS EXCELLENCY. I have no idea of giving orders or commands to the President.

Here follows ten full lines of indirectness.

THE PRESIDENT. I am willing in a friendly way to discuss matters that touch internal affairs.

Where is the claim of suzerainty that permits interference by England in the internal affairs of South African republics? At the very threshold of the last conference Kruger makes it plain and compels the English diplomat to admit that he has no right to demand, order, or command one thing as it relates to the internal affairs of South African republics.

Where is the claim of the friends of England that she had any legal right to interfere upon the question of suffrage or any other question relating to the internal affairs of Africa, for that was the question; that was what she was trying to do. She was trying to have English citizens run the Republic, to vote the Republic, and fight for the Queen. President Kruger said:

I am willing, in a friendly way, to discuss matters that touch internal affairs.

Let me read again and show you the high commissioner is forced to uncover the main point he is seeking—that of suffrage. Before I read, let me read what was in his heart, what his intentions were, and how he intended to control the electors in the Republic and have them to vote there and fight, if necessary, under the British flag. I read first from page 3, from his communication to Chamberlain explaining his intentions. When gentlemen upon this floor or any other floor talk about these liberty-loving Englishmen going over there to bring the blessings of liberty to those people, let them read from their own commissioner what his intentions were. It is not necessary to go to a magazine article, written by gentlemen who are paid to write the English side. This is what he himself says:

Bearing both these points in mind, I proposed that the full franchise should be given to every foreigner who (a) had been resident for five years in the Republic; (b) declared his intention to reside permanently; (c) took an oath to obey the laws, undertake all obligations of citizenship, and defend the independence of the country.

Where is the proposition—to renounce allegiance to the Queen, as you find it here in the record—except, after getting his first paper, and he is put in possession of part of his citizenship, the commissioner demands that he shall not renounce his allegiance to the Queen, but says that after that, if he decides to take his full papers, and if during the next three or five years the Outlanders find that they are not in full accord with the Boers, and that they can handle that country better with the bullet than they can with the ballot, then they are willing to renounce their allegiance, because it then becomes the Englishman's country and not the Dutchman's home, who laid the foundations of that home away back in the early day when our fathers started on this continent. There never has been a day nor an hour that their liberties have not been imperiled by the same country that sought to imperil our liberties. This Republic has been successful because we are a brave people, who have been isolated and thereby protected.

Mind you, Mr. President, I am reading from the proposition addressed to Mr. Chamberlain himself, explaining the intention of the high commissioner, Mr. Milner. You will not be surprised, then, when you know what was in his heart to read the conversation between him and President Kruger. Let me read further from this communication:

What was vital in my scheme was the simplification of the oath and the immediate admission to full burghership on taking it. The last words are italicized by the high commissioner: "It is a direct proposition to make citizens, but not subjects; to allow the Englishman to enjoy without paying the honest dues of citizenship."

Kruger, still patient, still maintaining that the high commissioner has no legal right to speak, again gets the high commissioner to admit it, and says, as a fair reason for restricting suffrage:

THE PRESIDENT. I would like you to bear one point in view, viz. that all kinds of nations and languages of nearly all powers have rushed in at the point where the gold is to be found. In other countries they make it four or five years to obtain the right to vote. With us the difference is this:

I am not surprised that in other places the men would have to wait for more than a year to get it, because there are millions of old burghers, and the few that come in can not outvote the old burghers; but with us those who rushed into the gold fields are in large numbers and of all kinds, and the number of old burghers is still insignificant; therefore we are compelled to make the franchise so that they can not all rush into it at once, and as soon as we can assure ourselves by a gradual increase of our burghers that we can safely do it, our plan was to reduce the time for anyone there to take up the franchise, and that is also my plan.

His excellency understands that if those who rushed in speedily got a vote equal to our burghers, and they can vote in the Volksraad, then in a very short time those who are brought in can turn the laws topsy turvy and do as they like, and with that my independence would fall, in that they could make laws as they liked, and the burghers would be crushed out in that way, and that is why they are so strict on that point. As his excellency doubtless knows, I have proposed to the Volksraad that the time should be reduced by five years, and gradually as more trusted burghers join our numbers we can perhaps go further.

Mr. President, I shall go but one step further at this time, to show the insufferable impertinence of the representatives of Great Britain. I may feel compelled to do so at a later day if gentlemen who may oppose this resolution shall claim that the demands of England within were made in good faith.

There was an association formed in South Africa of delectable and delightful citizens known as the South African League. I want to show you the insufferable impertinence of the representatives of that league at that particular time. It was organized to encourage Great Britain to interfere in internal affairs in South Africa.

Its members were not willing to assume the duties of citizens, to announce their intentions, and surrender allegiance to Great Britain, and by becoming citizens of the Republic help to make its laws; but they intended to change the laws by use of political "influence," or what is spoken of latterly as "pull." They corresponded with the Government of Great Britain and were given a warm hearing, and if any Senator will take time to read the correspondence to learn what they intended to demand, you will see at once why President Kruger was suspicious of "friendly hints."

I call your attention to the communication of this modest body of unnaturalized citizens dated June 16, this year, pages 32, 34, and 38, and addressed to the British high commissioner at Cape Town. They demand, first, that the judiciary shall not be governed by the statutes of the Republic; second, a decided change in the manner of amending the constitution; third, that the Dutch language shall be abandoned in the Congress and the courts and the English language substituted therefor. The next in importance, they demand that an alien should have the same opportunity to hold civil-service appointment as the citizen; a change in municipal government to allow aliens to have same power as citizens; also a change in the police force and in the jury system.

There is a fort overlooking Johannesburg, and it must come down. I quote the exact language: "No permanent cordiality between the two antagonistic elements of the community can be looked for until the entire demolition of the fort." Then I suppose it is fair to say there would be "permanent cordiality" if the fort was demolished. You may remember the "permanent cordiality" between the wolf and the sheep after the dog had been demolished. If there remains any doubt as to the plan of the high commissioner, I read (page 46) from his dispatch to Mr. Chamberlain, July 14, this year:

The question is, Does it insure immediate and substantial share of political powers for uitlanders? which is what I am aiming at.

Ah, Mr. President, there is, there can be, no doubt about what he was aiming at—"immediate and substantial share of political powers" by aliens and unnaturalized residents. Suppose such a proposition should be made to us by any country under any circumstances. They would get the same answer that Kruger now gives them at Modder River and Ladysmith.

Mr. President, I had thought to read you the opinions of our own people, as expressed in public meetings and the papers, but I have detained you now too long. I can not close, however, without reading extracts from the speech of Michael Davitt six weeks since in the English House of Commons.

Speaking of charges against the Boers, he said:

As this bill sanctioning this war provides means for its prosecution and commits this House to this policy, which provoked hostilities, I will vote against its second reading. The honorable member for Sheffield (Sir Ellis Ashmead Bartlett), who spoke a few moments ago, spoke on Friday last and made general charges of corruption against the Transvaal Government and grounded a defense for this war upon these charges. I challenged him for proofs five days ago. Where are they to-day?

Not a single tittle of evidence has he brought forward to substantiate these calumnies, and this is the general character of the slanderous campaign of the jingo authors of this war. The honorable member is, I believe, a nobleman in the country of Swaziland and would be entitled to sit in the house of lords if that part of Africa, if such an institution existed, but I am not aware that he has ever been in the country in his life or can speak with authority on South African affairs.

The honorable member contends, of course, that this war was necessary and that it ought to have taken place long ago. He, at least, is consistent. One of the objects of this war, according to the colonial secretary and to the leader of the House, is to save the natives from Boer oppression and to give them the better and more humane government of Great Britain. Not a single word of proof of this oppression has been offered in this debate.

It is one of a series of countless assertions reflecting upon the character of your foes, not a single one of which was proved to be true.

It is only a part, but a cruel part, of the method by which this miserable war has been promoted.

These editors and stockbrokers ought, in penance, to be compelled to walk past the inquiry room at the war office every day to witness the scenes which this policy is responsible for. This is what they would witness, as described by a correspondent in one of the London papers: "As one stands by the door of the room, with its cold official surroundings, and looks toward the corner where upon an easel are displayed names of those who have given their lives for their country, there is an unconquerable feeling that one is actually in the presence of the dead. The suggestion is heightened by the coming and going of the mourners. They pass in silently. Ladies in their furs, and their humbler sisters in sorrow from the striving quarters of the city. Each is turning a strained white face to the lists, and praying silently that nothing will be revealed. Side by side a daintily gloved hand and a grimy finger move slowly down the roll. The gloved hand stops midway in a list of killed, and the agonized eyes tell the remainder of the story of death." This is one side of the picture. On another page of the same paper this was justified and described in the following manner:

"PATRIOTISM THAT PAID—HOW THE INVESTORS BACKED THE LITTLE BRITISH ARMY.

"The 1895 boom in South African shares has come back after a holiday of four years, but its return is not welcomed by those who expressed the greatest regret at its departure. The reason of this is that it gave no indication of its approach and sprung its arrival upon an unprepared city. The Kafir houses and the stock-exchange professionals even throw doubt upon its genuineness and pretend to think that it is only a little wolf masquerading in the lion's skin. They know all the while that it is the real thing; but if they could get a few sellers to weaken the market for them it would suit their books much better."

And then follows the announcement that "yesterday's chartered became a hot favorite and were bid up to 3½, with signs of old-fashioned buying in five and ten thousand share lines.

"With regard to them, it is plausibly argued that they will benefit most from the results of the war, and will be soonest able to take advantage of the change in the situation. It is still possible that the Boers may do a great deal of harm to mines on the Rand, but they can not possibly hurt Rhodesia. After the fighting is over a few more weeks will see railway communication with Bulawayo restored and a new influx of immigrants into Rhodesia started." And this is the war for the "franchise," the war against "Boer corruption," the war for "justice, liberty, and humanity." It is not such a war. It is a war for the meaneast and most mercenary of ends and aims which ever prompted conquest or aggression, and it will rank in history as the greatest crime of the nineteenth century.

Mr. President, but a few words more and I shall be done. I have shown the resolution to be in line of precedent of the policy of the United States of America; that it makes no difference whether the political crime against a republic is in Europe, Asia, Africa, or America, the duty of protest is the same, though a different course may be marked out for us by reason of location, duty, and policy; that though we are on friendly terms with Great Britain, yet we are not in such an alliance as should swerve us from the full discharge of our duty; that, in view of our settled practice, it should not be regarded by England as aimed at her, for we will do the same when any monarch attempts to destroy a republic. I think I have shown the difference between the people of England and the administration or Government of England. There is no one familiar with the question but what admits that if Gladstone were living and his party in power this bloody war would never have occurred.

And if it be charged that this resolution is calculated to injure one political party in England and help another and is a mixing in with their politics, then we answer that if the plain discharge of our duty as republicans and democrats in the broad sense interferes with politics in England, the effect is too insignificant to be considered now. I have not sought to excite prejudice by our past differences with England. They are forgotten and forgiven. But when the colors of a republic are struck and we sit silent, it would seem that we are ashamed or tired of our institutions and by our silence give consent to the destruction of self-government in Africa.

Mr. President, at Mount Vernon an ex-Confederate soldier told me that he was once stationed near the grave of Washington and visited the tomb in his uniform; that he left his arms on the outside and met there many men in blue. A spirit of thankfulness comes over me whenever that picture appears before my eyes. I am thankful that amidst our bloody strife there was one uncontested spot left where brothers could meet. I have always had it in my mind that the whole United States, like that spot at Mount Vernon, was one spot on the earth where lovers of liberty and self-government could meet. The Greeks found comfort here. The Hungarians sent Kossuth, and he was received with open arms and was given assistance in adjusting with Austria.

Simon Bolivar drew deep inspiration from here and established self-government in South America. The statue of Liberty Enlightening the World in New York Harbor is neither a myth, fiction, nor a lie. We may say without boasting that if self-government is right, we have helped the world. The gates at Castle Garden have always swung in, but not alone because of the better wage. One other reason is that they have watched us from afar. They have seen our common schools. They have seen poor boys open the gates of wealth. They have seen the boys go from the shops and farms of honest toil to the Congress and march from the towpath and the rail splitter's cabin to the White House. They have heard us tell our children: "There is the highway of life; be brave and honest, and there is no door that will not open to you if you are worthy."

Then, Mr. President, if I am right, this resolution will help. It will say to the world, "Washington, Monroe, Clay, and Webster are dead, but the American policy still lives." It may sting the oppressor, as Webster said, but it will be a message of affection and hope to the struggling Republic.

MR. LODGE. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has said. I wish that many of the eloquent passages of his speech might have been delivered in the House of Commons, where I am sure they would have been appropriate, and I am also sure they would have done a great deal of good. But I have no intention of either discussing or debating this question, Mr. President. Whatever private opinions or private sympathies may be, there is a wide gulf fixed between private sympathy and opinion and public action. The action of the Senate as part of the treaty-making power would constitute public action. The executive department has assumed an attitude of strict neutrality between the two parties in the very deplorable war which is now in progress in South Africa. If we should pass such a resolution as this, we should immediately change the attitude of the country.

During our own war with Spain we were extremely desirous of and we expected neutrality from the other nations of the earth. That neutrality we received, and in the case of at least one of the parties in the present war it was very friendly neutrality. Our Government has assumed the attitude of strict neutrality in this case. If we are to depart from it by the passage of a Senate resolution, it certainly is a subject which requires the most careful consideration, and I trust, Mr. President—and I so move—that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MR. MASON. I understood the resolution would be referred without any motion. There is no objection to the reference. When I introduced the resolution I asked that it lie on the table until I could be heard in this opening statement. Then I understood that under the rules it would go without any motion to the committee.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CAPT. B. TELLEFSEN.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, as a case not acted upon by the Fifty-fifth Congress, a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the claim of Capt. B. Tellefsen, of the Norwegian steamer Libert, against the Government of the United States for $998.98, being the expenses incurred by him in consequence of a violation of Article XIII of the treaty of commerce and navigation of 1827 between the United States and Sweden and Norway.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 11, 1899.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in addition to the usual number, 500 copies of the report of the assistant inspector-general on the State homes, and 150 copies of the record of members for the use of the Home; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. Samuel T. Baird, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. William L. Greene, late a Representative from the State of Nebraska, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies of the report proper, 500 copies of the report of the assistant inspector-general on the State homes, and 150 copies of the record of members, for the use of the Home.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE SAMUEL T. BAIRD.

Mr. MCENERY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions from the House of Representatives relative to the death of my late colleague in that body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolutions from the House of Representatives; which were read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 8, 1899.

Resolved. That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. SAMUEL T. BAIRD, a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress and a member-elect to this Congress from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate of the passage of these resolutions, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, at some future time I shall ask that a day be fixed to pay fitting tribute to the memory of the Hon. S. T. BAIRD, late a member of the House from the State of Louisiana. I now offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana submits resolutions, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved. That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of SAMUEL T. BAIRD, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved. That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 12, 1899, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 11, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read, corrected, and approved.

THE FINANCIAL BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order which has been assigned as the business of the House for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Monday, December 11, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. No. 1, entitled "A bill to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes;" general debate thereon shall continue to not later than 5 o'clock p. m. of Friday, the 15th day of December, and thereafter debate under the five-minute rule until 5 o'clock p. m. of Saturday, the 16th day of December, at which time the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, with any amendments adopted by the committee, and a vote shall be taken on the bill and amendments, if any, without intervening motion, to final passage, immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday, the 18th day of December. And during said debate the House shall on each day adjourn not later than 5 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House which has just been read by the Clerk, the House will now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the financial bill, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will please take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 1) to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, this country presents the anomalous situation of being the absolute and unchallenged leader in almost every field of advanced thought, whether in science or literature; certainly the most advanced in material development and the control of trade; by far the superior in manufactures and growth of markets; and yet it is the field of greatest controversy upon the subject of the standard of value and the proper media of exchange.

No nation has devoted more time to public discussion and legislative consideration of the question of finance than the United States. The past twenty-five years has witnessed the greatest interest in the subject of any similar period in the history of the nation, and during the past four years every possible phase of the subject has been presented. Continued discussion very naturally develops various proposals for remedy of actual and fancied evils, and the time seems ripe for an honest and careful effort at a fair solution of the problem.

Notwithstanding the fact that the so-called money question continues in great interest among our people, and notwithstanding there have been occasions when serious doubt clouded the situation and produced grave fears lest the entire fabric of our monetary system might be seriously shaken, yet it is to the great credit of the Government that every dollar of our money in circulation is absolutely sound and unquestioned. Throughout the entire time of troublous discussion and debate, in periods when public confidence had well-nigh disappeared and panics produced serious dangers, as well as in the periods of our greatest prosperity, every dollar of American money has been at a parity with the best dollar in circulation. This condition has led many people into the erroneous belief that there was no need for legislation, and that the best that the Government could do would be to let the subject alone.

Such people are not familiar with the frequent pledges of the Government to maintain the parity of our money, declaring by Congressional acts the honest purpose of the Government to faithfully and surely guarantee the full parity of all money in circulation. The present parity depends entirely upon such declarations and guaranties, but its maintenance and enforcement rest with the judgment or caprice of the Secretary of the Treasury, who, by a single order directing the use of silver in the discharge of our obligations, may completely destroy the parity and shift the standard to the metal so used. It seems far better to attempt a proper regulation of the question by a clear and permanent statute rather than depend upon occasional declarations by the Government of its intention. It is far better to end the matter by a public law, which shall be plain and unequivocal, rather than rely upon proposals of what may or shall be done at some future date, or leave so dangerous an option within the control of one man, whether he be the President or his financial adviser.

OUR MONEY AND ITS HISTORY—FORMS OF MONEY.

All of our money in the United States is under Federal control, and the laws authorize ten different kinds, namely, gold coins, gold certificates, standard silver dollars, silver certificates, Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, subsidiary silver, United States notes (greenbacks), national-bank notes, nickels, and coppers. Each kind is in circulation to-day, all at parity, every dollar equal in purchasing and debt-paying power. Gold coins, standard silver dollars, and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, are full legal tender. United States notes (greenbacks) are full legal tender, except for duties on imports and interest on the public debt. Subsidiary silver is legal tender for amounts not exceeding $10, and nickels and coppers are legal tender to the extent of 25 cents. Gold certificates, silver certificates, and national-bank notes are not legal tender.

The legal-tender quality adds no value to the money, but merely makes provision whereby debts may be discharged by the tender of specific kinds of money which, being good, the creditor is bound to accept. It is for convenience and to avoid embarrassment which a capacious creditor might cause by insisting upon any special character of payment, or which a capacious debtor might create by making payment in a character of money at the time greatly inconvenient to the creditor. I do not deny but that there are those who claim that legal tender adds value, nor that governments have repeatedly undertaken to supply a deficiency in money by giving it the legal-tender quality and attempting to force it into circulation.

The universal and absolute failure of all such efforts is sufficient evidence that this quality is not a quality of value. There is not a single instance in the history of finance where the legal-tender quality added to a money has enabled it to circulate at a greater value than its intrinsic value, where it does not possess equally the pledge and faith of the government for its full redemption. The history of government efforts to force legal-tender money into circulation irrespective of its intrinsic value and without the government pledge is a record of failures, without a single exception. All of the various kinds of money in the United States are based upon a common standard of value, in which each can be measured. The present standard of value in this country is gold, and has been so recognized in practice for more than half a century.

THE STANDARD.

Money is a medium of exchange, and where there are different varieties there must be a common measurement of value. Whether this standard is sought to be controlled by the statute or left exclusively to the laws governing trade and commerce, nevertheless there is, and always has been, in every community dealing in trade, a common method of measurement whereby articles of value are exchanged. This proposition is almost self-evident and is universally admitted. It is only when effort is made to control by statute such measurement of value, different from the method pursued in common trade, that confusion arises.

There can be no proper and valid exchange unless the tool of measurement regulating the exchange shall be equally acceptable to both parties. The basic principle of exchange is value. The question of convenience, of immediate use, of human need or desire may be involved, but nevertheless the basic principle is value; and where there is not an absolute exchange of property for property, the standard of measurement or unit of value which acts as the common tool of exchange must in itself contain the element of value. The element of value is just as essential to a standard of value as the element of weight to a standard of weight or of length to a standard of measurement. Firmness, stability, and constancy are characteristics which any standard must possess if it shall meet the demand upon it by universal use for honest and true measurement, whether of value, weight, or length—firmness in adherence to the principle and purpose to which it is dedicated, stability in its individual strength, and constancy in its character to preserve its integrity. Adaptability to the uses of trade, simplicity of terms to meet the requirements of small transactions equally with large concerns, and uniformity of reputation are qualities necessary to the successful operation of any standard.

There can be but one standard of measurement at a given time. An attempt to couple two standards differing in any degree in essential characteristics will shift the standard to the weaker link. If the basis of a standard of value should be two metals, each possessing characteristics essential to true measurement, there would still be, in effect, but one standard. Value is determined by such a multitude of circumstances, bearing such complex relations to each other, influenced by supply and demand, utility, adaptability, human desire, and other causes without number, that exchanges of property can easily be effected only by the common use of a variety of media of exchange each representing accurately the units of value as measured by the standard into which it can be converted on demand. Voluntary and universal exchange in coppers, nickels, silver, and gold, bank notes, greenbacks, and certificates mark the true test of a standard into which each can be converted with ease.

Law does not create this condition. It merely recognizes it and operates as a check against its disturbance. All efforts to effect by law a standard through any different principle than this have been futile, and the laws of trade and commerce, indifferent to statute law, have universally and consistently recognized as the standard that metal the intrinsic value of which has been most stable and most free from fluctuations. The immutable laws of trade, which control such condition, suffer no more by a statute than an effort to change the tides by royal edict.

HISTORY OF OUR MONEY STANDARD.

The first effort in this country toward establishing a monetary standard was in 1786, when the Congress of the Confederation chose as the unit of value the "Spanish milled dollar," containing 375.64 grains of pure silver. There was then no mint in the United States, and the "milled dollar" was never coined in America.

The first coinage law under the Republic was enacted April 2, 1792, and sought to establish a double standard of gold and silver at a ratio of 1 to 15. Whatever the result of the operation of the law, and the failure of the two metals to maintain the relative values fixed by statute, nevertheless it is quite clear that it was the intent and purpose of the lawmaking power to provide and legalize a double standard of value.

The subsequent act of June 28, 1834, changing the ratio from 1 to 15 to 1 to 16, by reducing the weight of the eagle from 270 grains to 258 grains, was in the hope of maintaining the double standard by regulating the ratio to conform to the commercial values of the metals.

Less than three years thereafter, by the act of January 18, 1837, which changed the ratio from 1 to 16 to 1 to 15.988 by again modifying the quantity of metal in the coins, the effort to maintain the double standard was apparent. The remarkable discovery of gold in California in 1847 and 1848 and in Australia in 1851 had a material influence upon the relative value of gold and silver, and the bullion in the silver coins of the United States increased in value beyond the value noted by their face. This condition bore fruit in the act of February 21, 1853, which provided for the reduction of the amount of metal in the silver half-dollar, quarter, and dime, and prohibited the further coinage of subsidiary silver coins, except upon Government account. The bullion value of a silver dollar prior to 1853, and, indeed, prior to 1873, was, the great proportion of the time, in excess of the face value, and comparatively few were coined.

The difference between the bullion and face value of silver coin accounted for their withdrawal from the channels of trade as a medium of exchange, and their conversion into commodities, regulated in value by the laws governing trade and commerce, irrespective of the statute making provision for their circulation as money at fixed valuations. The necessity for small change created the demand for the half-dollars, quarters, and dimes, which remained in circulation because the bullion was reduced and circulated at par because of the guaranty of the Government. By the provision of the law these subdivisions of the dollar were "paid out at the mint in exchange for gold coins at par," and there has never been a doubt but that their redemption would be equally at par. The struggle of the Government to maintain the double standard by law continued for nearly sixty years. The shifting of the ratio between the two metals was met by the change of statute.

The universal experience in business transactions marked the withdrawal from circulation of the undervalued coin. The debates in Congress just prior to the passage of the act of February 21, 1853, clearly mark the change of sentiment against the further effort to maintain a double standard. It was plainly claimed upon the floor of the House that in practice the gold standard was in force, and that it was the clear purpose of the Government to accept the single gold standard. While no statute was made to this end, the operations of the laws of trade gave recognition to this basis of values. No effort was made to change this sentiment, and for twenty years the question of coinage commanded but little attention by the American people. The struggle of the Government through the civil war crippled the credit of the Republic, and for a time specie payments were suspended and the Government degenerated to a paper basis.

The act of March 18, 1869, "to strengthen the public credit," pledged the Government to the payment of its demand notes and obligations in coin. This was the dawn of a new day in American finance and marked the resurrection of Government credit from the abyss into which it had fallen. The only coin in circulation at the time of the passage of the act of March 18, 1869, was gold. The subsequent provision for the redemption of the demand notes, and the universal policy of the Government to make redemption in the best coin known at the time of redemption, demonstrates beyond doubt that this pledge of the Government has been faithfully kept. It was but a short step, in principle as well as in time, to the provisions in the act of July 14, 1870, "to authorize the refunding of the national debt," which made the bonds of that issue "redeemable in coin at the present standard of value."

The steps approaching the adoption of the gold standard became short and rapid. For five years prior to 1873 the question of legalizing the gold standard was under discussion in financial circles. As early as the winter of 1869 a bill was prepared in the Treasury Department containing provision for the discontinuance of the coinage of the silver dollar and the adoption of the gold dollar piece, at the standard weight of 25.8 grains, as the unit of value. This proposed measure was widely circulated among experts in finance, whose suggestions and criticisms were invited. On April 25, 1870, this bill, as S. 819, was introduced, and on December 19 following was favorably reported.

From the date of its preparation, in all of its forms, and throughout its discussions, covering several sessions, the provisions before mentioned remained intact. Not only that, but these two provisions were the only provisions relative to the standard of value and the silver dollar ever contained in the bill, either as it was originally drawn or throughout its entire consideration. The old standard silver dollar was never mentioned in the bill. The bill became a law February 12, 1873. For more than a quarter of a century preceding that date the commercial world had treated gold as the standard of measurement of values. The "act of 1873" was merely the policy and practice of our people crystallized into statute law. The change from the unwritten to the written law was simple and unattended by the slightest disturbance in trade.

If there had been no further legislation concerning the coinage of silver, there would exist to-day no single doubt of the money standard of the United States. The law of February 12, 1873, clearly adopts the gold one-dollar piece, at the standard weight of 25.8 grains of gold, as the unit of value. That statute has never been repealed nor directly amended, and by legal construction is in force to-day. Yet subsequent acts have so affected it that there is some doubt as to whether gold is fully recognized as our monetary standard. The act of February 28, 1878, authorizing the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and the act of July 14, 1890, directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, brought into circulation such a tremendous quantity of silver guaranteed by the Government to circulate at par that the burden of the Government was so increased as to make doubtful the strength and stability of the standard.

The fall in the price of silver gave courage to the advocates of cheap money, who sought, by restoring the silver dollar to circulation at less than its intrinsic value, to accomplish what they had failed to accomplish in their battle for cheap money at an earlier period. Public sentiment so suddenly changed upon this question that a free-coinage bill passed the House of Representatives on the 13th of December, 1876, by a vote of 167 to 53. Fortunately it was not acted upon by the Senate. A similar measure passed the House on November 3, 1877, by a vote of 163 to 34. Early in the year 1878 this bill was considered by the Senate and a compromise effected, resulting in the passage of the so-called "Bland-Allison act" on the 15th of February, 1878.

With all the ills which this measure brought upon the country, it was far to be preferred to an absolute free-coinage bill which threatened the country at that date.

President Hayes vetoed the bill, but on the 28th of February, 1878, it was passed over his veto by both Houses, the vote in the House being 196 to 73, and in the Senate 46 to 19. The rapidity with which the silver dollars were coined and issued into circulation greatly stimulated the advocates of cheap money, who became restless at the delay occasioned by the mints, which were not able to turn out the money as rapidly as the people desired, and the law of July 14, 1890, providing for the immediate issue of Treasury notes based upon the bullion purchased, to be redeemed by the dollars as coined, enabled the issue of the money more rapidly than was provided by the capacity of the mints.

By the act of September 26, 1890, Congress discontinued the coinage of the one-dollar gold piece, which the law of February 12, 1873, had declared to be the "unit of value." This act further confused the legal status of the standard. While the actual existence of the gold one-dollar piece is not essential, yet, it having been declared by law to be the "unit of value," its discontinuance cast doubt upon the character of the standard. The purchasing clause of the law of July 14, 1890, was repealed November 1, 1893. So grievous had grown the burden upon the Government because of the vast issue of a depreciated coin that confidence in the Government's ability to maintain it was shaken. The same law which repealed the purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, contained the provision declaring it to be the fixed purpose of the Government to maintain its gold and silver "of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value."

But for this declaration the silver coins would have circulated only at their intrinsic value, which was less than par. With the declaration the pledge of the Government for the maintenance of their parity with gold created an obligation as sacred as a national bond. By this pledge the Government made additional recognition of the standard of gold, in which, by implication, it proposed to measure the value of the silver dollar.

DOUBTS.

The tremendous increase of silver coin under the operation of the laws of 1878 and 1890 created a doubt as to the ability of the Government to maintain the parity of all of its money. Prior to 1873, when the gold standard was adopted, there had been issued by the Government only 8,031,238 silver dollars. From February 12, 1878, when the recoinage of the silver dollar was authorized, to November 1, 1893, when such coinage was discontinued, there were coined by the Government 482,357,376 silver dollars. Upon this last date there was not a silver dollar in circulation whose face value equaled its intrinsic value. The difference between the intrinsic and face value was a Government obligation, so established by Congressional act. No other method of maintenance of the parity of silver with gold other than the pledge of the Government was known to the law. The ability of the Government to bear this burden was never questioned. The mere money obligation imposed by the law created no serious embarrassment. It was the principle involved, coupled with the repeated efforts by a very considerable number of the people of the country to establish absolute free coinage of silver, which shook public confidence and produced the fear that a change of the monetary standard would result. Numerous propositions looking to such change were introduced in Congress, some of which were given such consideration as to keep the anxiety of the public at high pitch.

The passage of the so-called "Teller" resolution, February 28, 1896, by the United States Senate was hardly calculated to quiet these fears. In a period of less than twenty years two forcible efforts to establish absolute free coinage of silver were made and two laws enacted authorizing the coinage of the silver dollar, resulting in the issue of the vast sum of $482,357,376, the same being the number of silver dollars coined from 1873 to 1893. With such dangers existing and with the energy of a great political party, with a vast number, though a minority, of our people clamoring for a change of standard, the necessity for a positive and unequivocal declaration by law seems absolute and paramount.

WISDOM OF IMMEDIATE ACTION.

If the legal standard to-day is the gold standard, under the act of 1873, a positive statute to that effect can do no harm. If, on the other hand, there is any reasonable doubt, it should be dispelled by a statute plain and clear in its terms and absolute in its effect. The American Government is too great for it to hesitate to make absolutely certain any of its policies, its responsibility to its people in the proper and peaceful discharge of their trade too sure and certain for it to suffer the slightest doubt of the standard of measurement of values in the vast business transactions of our people. The present conditions are most favorable and the time most opportune for the clear and unequivocal adoption of the gold standard.

Prior to the year 1896 the gold standard had been legally adopted by thirteen of the leading nations of the world, and since 1896 by four such nations, as evidenced by the following table:

Austria-Hungary	1892	Great Britain	1816
Brazil	1854	Japan	1897
Costa Rica	1896	Norway	1873
British Honduras	1894	Peru	1899
Chile	1895	Portugal	1864
Denmark	1873	Russia	1897
Egypt	1885	Sweden	1873
Finland	1877	Turkey	1882
Germany	1871

Ten nations have suspended the coinage of silver on private account, thus effectually, although not absolutely, fixing their status as gold-standard countries. The names of such nations and the dates of their action are shown by the following table:

United States	1833, 1873, and 1878	Spain	1878
Belgium	1873	India	1893
France	1873	Switzerland	1874
Holland	1873	Greece	1875
Italy	1875	Venezuela	1892

Our adoption of the gold standard is in perfect accord with the movement in all of the leading nations of the world and in perfect harmony with the policy of our Government throughout its history. To dispel all lingering doubt from the mind of the public and to give clear expression to the nation's purpose relative to its monetary standard is the object of the legislation proposed by the bill under consideration. When the standard shall be permanently established and all doubt of its stability removed the parity of all our money will be fully recognized, and the kind of money in which payment shall be made will rarely, if ever, be the subject of dispute. When certainty shall take the place of doubt and the integrity of our credit be as fixed as the honor of the nation, the national debt can be readily refunded at lower interest rates and future loans negotiated with ease upon better terms than ever before.

The rapid development of American trade and its vast expansion, bringing our people into close relations with the leading nations of the world, makes it imperative that the standard of value in which settlements are made shall be the best known to the highest civilization and shall safely appeal to intelligent and successful experience. Recent events, shaped by causes beyond our control, bearing obligations which national honor requires shall be courageously discharged, open new fields for American statesmanship. Channels of trade yet unknown to American enterprise and avenues of commerce yet to welcome American products will surely result. Such conditions emphasize the necessity for a standard of value which shall remain firm throughout the vicissitudes of competitive trade. Its permanence and stability should be above suspicion. Its security should be absolute.

Such are the general conditions of trade, as well as the condition of the National Treasury, that no disturbance whatever can possibly be caused by the legislation proposed. The volume and variety of our interstate and foreign trade has never before been equaled. The supply of labor fails to meet the demand for employment. Bountiful harvests and the output of manufactures strain the means of transportation. Vast enterprises for the extension of shipping facilities by land and sea are in progress. No clouds yet appear to cast a shadow upon our prosperity. The national revenues have been abundant and satisfactory, notwithstanding the expense incident to the war with Spain, which has been concluded with success and honor, nor the expense incurred by the insurrection in the Philippines. The taxes imposed by the Government to meet the increased expenditures are being patriotically borne by our people without a murmur.

The Government has been able to meet its obligations with ease and has declared its willingness to anticipate its interest payments so as to quickly return the money to the channels of trade, while at the same time it has reduced the national debt by the purchase of bonds before their maturity. The revenues exceed the expenditures, notwithstanding the extraordinary obligations. The Government is suffering no embarrassment whatever with her finances. The net gold in the Treasury on the 2d day of October, 1899, was $254,328,820. There is more gold in the United States now than ever before. The world's product of gold in 1898 was the greatest in history and exceeded the product of 1897 by $48,616,000 and of 1896 by $85,177,000. The product of gold and silver since 1860 is shown by the accompanying table:

Product of gold and silver in the world since 1860.

[The annual production of 1890 to 1873 is obtained from 5-year period estimates, compiled by Dr. Adolph Soetbeer. Since 1872 the estimates are those of the Bureau of the Mint.]

The product of gold from mines in the United States in 1898 was the greatest in the history of the world, exceeding the product of 1897 by $7,100,000 and of 1896 by $11,375,000. The product of gold and silver from mines in the United States since 1860 is shown by the following table:

The output of silver, as shown by the above tables, has varied in different years, while the product of gold has steadily increased annually since 1890. Notwithstanding the fluctuations in the product of silver, its value per ounce has had a uniform tendency downward, declining to 59 cents per ounce in 1898, its lowest register, as shown by the following table:

If, under all these conditions, the United States shall clearly by law adopt the gold standard, it will experience even less friction than resulted from the resumption of specie payment. The Government is most fortunate in being able to act in such an important matter under such favorable circumstances.

MAINTENANCE OF THE STANDARD.

But the gold standard is not to be adopted by a mere definition of the unit of value. Its full, complete, and harmonious operation must be provided for. The definition of the unit of value should be followed by a provision for the full payment of Government obligations in the standard. The recognition of the standard is reflected in the method pursued by the Government in the payment of its obligations. Mere statutory declaration would be idle unless the conduct of the nation toward its own debts were consistent with the statute. Law and conduct both must be free from ambiguity. National honor and national credit are closely allied. In the discharge of its debts the Government has always followed the practice of making payment in money equivalent to the best money known at the time. Gold has been the money received by the Government when our credit has been pledged, and the discharge of such debts in money of less value would be repudiation.

This provision will create no change in the practice which the Government has universally observed. Where the custom has so long prevailed to pay out gold for the greenback and Treasury note, as well as for the interest-bearing obligations, the plain provision by statute, in perfect harmony with such custom, will strengthen the credit of the Government, without effecting the slightest change in the national policy. The creation of a division of the Treasury where this practice may be operative, separate from the fiscal transactions of the Government, is in perfect accord with good business principles. It provides a place where, figuratively and practically, the "counter" of the Government may be found, with an officer ready and fully authorized to discharge all of the duties devolving upon the Government for the issue and redemption of its obligations. Such division of the Treasury will hold, in addition to the funds specifically dedicated to the payment of outstanding certificates, an amount of gold equal to 25 per cent of the amount both of United States notes and Treasury notes outstanding as a reserve fund to meet any demand for the redemption of greenbacks and Treasury notes when presented.

There is now no specific law authorizing any particular sum to be held as a reserve to meet the redemption of the greenbacks, unless it is contained in the provision of the law relating to the issue of gold certificates, directing that no more gold certificates shall be issued whenever the gold in the Treasury falls below $100,000,000. Such practice should be legalized and based upon a specific statute. A reserve fund of one-fourth of such notes outstanding is deemed sufficient to guard against any sudden demand of holders for the redemption of these obligations. Especially is it thought that such sum is sufficient in view of the provision wherein it is stipulated that all notes and certificates, when redeemed or exchanged, shall be held and not be withdrawn nor disbursed, except in exchange for an equivalent amount of the coin in which said notes or certificates were redeemed or exchanged, save only when transferred by the Secretary of the Treasury from one fund to another.

The different funds which would, by this section, be referred to such division of the Treasury, together with the respective amounts, on the 30th day of September, 1899, are as follows:

1. Gold coin and bullion, represented by outstanding gold certificates.....	$135,501,119
2. United States notes, represented by outstanding currency certificates.....	16,100,000
3. Silver dollars, represented by outstanding silver certificates.....	405,197,504
4. Silver bullion, represented by outstanding Treasury notes.....	91,167,280
5. Gold coin and bullion, equal to one-fourth of the United States notes ($346,681,016) and Treasury notes ($91,167,280) outstanding.....	109,462,074

The first four items enumerate the special deposits dedicated to specific payments. As these obligations are met, the deposits are correspondingly reduced.

In the absence of a law providing protection to the gold reserve, it is always subject to an encroachment in expenditures to meet the general expenses of the Government. Whenever such encroachment seems probable, a fear has arisen that the Government may not be able to meet its demand obligations, and a run upon the reserve for the redemption of the demand notes has followed. This situation is responsible for the so-called "endless chain." By separating the reserve fund from the general fund and prohibiting its use, except for redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes, the dangers to which it has been so greatly subjected will be removed. These demand notes are being redeemed in gold now and always have been, and no additional burden is imposed upon the Government. It is sought to simplify and legalize the practice, and create a division in the Treasury where the whole business of issuing and redeeming notes may be transacted, and to establish complete confidence in the redemption of our demand obligations.

INTERCHANGEABILITY.

If the absolute and unquestioned parity of all our money shall be truly and honestly maintained, proper provision for their interchangeability should be made. The provision for the interchangeability of the money of the Government has greatly frightened some people. The thought that any of our money might be taken to the counter of the Government and, upon presentation, be exchanged for gold coin has developed in many honest minds a serious doubt of the ability of the Government to discharge such function. But how else is this full parity to be maintained? In what other manner is it possible to measure the value of money, except by its comparison with, or measurement by, the standard of value? No difficulty arises when a silver certificate is presented to the Government in exchange for silver dollars, or of a gold certificate for gold dollars, or of a currency certificate for greenbacks.

But these are mere certificates of deposit, or warehouse receipts, if you please, for actual property or commodity which is specifically on deposit at the National Treasury, especially and solely dedicated to the payment of the certificates outstanding, for the payment of which they are pledged. No trouble has existed in ordinary times for the exchange of a greenback for gold, and it was only because of the reissue of the greenback, creating a so-called "endless chain," that the Government was at all embarrassed in the redemption of its demand obligations. The provision of the bill under consideration whereby such notes when once redeemed shall remain undisturbed in the Treasury, except by transfer from one fund to another under the direction of the Secretary, and reissued only in exchange for the same coin for which such exchange or redemption was made, will forever put an end to such difficulty. It is only in the case of the silver dollar that any doubt arises when the subject of interchangeability is advanced.

This only emphasizes the claim before made, that the issue of the vast number of silver dollars has been the cause of the embarrassment to the Government relative to its monetary standard. But the fact exists most plainly that these dollars are in actual circulation, and are based on the obligation of the Government, no matter whether that obligation be in the form of a statutory pledge or resting for final redemption upon the gold standard of value; nevertheless, it still remains that their absolute parity with gold has been assured, and the obligation must be met. In my judgment, it is best to meet it squarely, fairly, plainly. The intrinsic value of the silver dollar is less than its face. There is a certain proportion of the silver dollar which is based entirely upon the Government pledge. There is a certain proportion which is equaled by its intrinsic value. The two can not be separated.

A part of the dollar can not be redeemed by the Government and a part unredeemed because it rests upon its intrinsic value. The only sensible and scientific way to make absolute provision for the parity is by providing that it shall be interchangeable with gold. I take it that few would object to this method but for the fear that a greater amount of silver dollars might be presented at one time than there was gold sufficient to meet the demand for exchange. But there are two things which will operate to overcome that fear. The first is that the legalizing of the gold standard and provision for the equality of all forms of money at a parity with the standard will so remove all doubt of the soundness and integrity of our money that there will be little occasion for the exchange of one kind of money for another.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. In reference to the silver dollars, when they are taken to the Treasury and are redeemed in gold, what is to become of them after they have been received by the Treasury? Are they to be paid out again or not?

Mr. OVERSTREET. There are two alternatives. The first is, they may be returned to trade upon the presentation of gold for their exchange, or they may be transferred by the Secretary of the Treasury from the redemption fund to the fiscal fund and used in the discharge of the Government expenses.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Then if they are paid out in due course of trade and transferred to this fund that the gentleman speaks of, do they not then become an endless chain in themselves, the same as you say the greenbacks and Treasury notes do?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, sir; for the following reason—

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Will the gentleman answer that? If they are paid out in the due course of trade, can they not be taken back and gold demanded, and then go the round again for another endless chain, like the one the gentleman has talked of in reference to greenbacks and Treasury notes? I would like the gentleman to make that clear.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am perfectly willing to answer the gentleman's question. I may say that I think I have answered it very conclusively in the argument that I have prepared, but in order to deal with entire fairness with the gentleman I will answer his question now. Under the present law an endless chain is created because the greenback is reissued immediately and may again seek its way to the Treasury for a second redemption. That is stopped by the proposition which I have just elaborated in my argument. Under the proposed law the silver dollar, if exchanged for gold, would be returned to trade upon presentation of gold for another exchange of the silver; or it may be returned from one fund, the redemption fund, to another, the fiscal fund, by the Secretary of the Treasury. Just at that point is to be found the reason why an endless chain of silver dollars can not occur. It is the Secretary of the Treasury who has that option and right to transfer the silver dollar and pay it out, and it only goes out in the payment of the expenses of the Government.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Then will the gentleman yield for one other question? I do not mean to interrupt the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Then, if I understand, under this act the option is left absolutely with the Secretary whether he will keep them to be redeemed in gold or whether he transfers them to a fund that can go into the channels of trade and be paid out by the Government. Is that what you mean?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand the gentleman.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Is that what you mean? Is that the option?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think that the part of my argument to which I am just about to direct my attention answers his question; and if it does not, when I am through I am perfectly willing to yield to him.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I do not mean captiously to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand, and I would willingly yield further if I did not think the gentleman's question was answered in the portion of my speech which is next to come.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Secretary of the Treasury exercises the option given him under this bill to keep the silver dollars and not to turn them into the general fund of the Government, will it not produce a contraction of the currency to the extent of $482,000,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Absolutely not, for the reason that the silver dollars can not be taken to the Treasury for exchange unless an equal amount of gold goes at once into circulation to take their place in trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. You mean to say that if there is no quantity of gold in the Treasury that they can not be redeemed. Is that your answer?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, that is an impossible query, for the reason that gold must be kept in the Treasury.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that when gold is drawn from the Treasury it is drawn for export, and that consequently when the silver dollar is presented to the Treasury and the gold is withdrawn that that money instead of remaining in circulation in this country goes to foreign countries? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. That happens under Democratic administrations. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] When the revenues of the Government do not equal expenses and trade becomes paralyzed and business at a standstill, then gold is exported; but under the beneficent influences of this measure and of the policy advocated by the Republican party, which presents it, that condition may and will never arise. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think I want to answer the first queries that were propounded, which I feel will be answered by the portion of my argument which I have now reached.

The demand for such exchange will be reduced in proportion as the certainty of the exchange is made manifest. [Applause on the Republican side.] There will be nothing to gain by the exchange.

If the silver dollar shall be made by law interchangeable with the gold dollar, if it can be used wherever the gold can be used, no benefit will accrue from such exchange. If the silver dollar is as good as gold, is not the holder entitled to the gold if offered in exchange? If the gold is no better than the silver dollar, can the fact be more completely demonstrated than by full exchange?

Furthermore, under the provisions of the proposed measure the large silver certificates will be broken up and reissued into certificates of denominations of one, two, and five dollars, thus bringing the silver circulation to the use of the small daily transactions of the people, which is commonly known as the pocket trade. Such provision will result in the scattering of the silver circulation, either in the dollar or the certificates, through so broad a territory and in the field of such constant demand that it will be exceedingly impracticable to gather together at one time any considerable amount for purposes solely of exchange at the Government counter. A few bills of large denomination, aggregating a very considerable sum, may be readily obtained, and their presentation for redemption or interchangeability would be embarrassing, but it is exceedingly difficult and expensive to gather and transport as many as a million silver dollar pieces, and equally troublesome to withdraw from the channels of daily trade any considerable sum of certificates of denominations of one, two, and five dollars. By this provision not only will the parity of the silver dollar be absolutely assured, but a place honorable and creditable for the use of the silver circulation will be effected.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if under this bill all forms of currency, including greenbacks, Treasury notes, silver certificates, and silver dollars, are not a charge upon the gold fund which may be exchanged by the Secretary of the Treasury for gold?

Mr. OVERSTREET. They are, and always have been. They are on the gold fund now.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. No, sir.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The policy has not been changed on the part of the Government, and the proposition of this bill only crystallizes into law that practice which the Government has followed throughout the history of the country for half a century.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will ask you if every single dollar of the circulation excepting gold is not, under this bill, made a part of this endless chain which may be used to extract gold from the Treasury?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If it is not a charge upon the gold, how do you remove this from being a part of the endless chain? Have you not charged all the time during the last four years that you had no other object except this endless chain that you wanted to break up? Did you ever hear of any other argument in favor of the establishment of the gold standard except that it was to break up this endless chain that you speak of?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am perfectly frank to state that the policy that the Republican party has advocated since 1896 only demonstrated the adaptability of that standard to the breaking of the endless chain.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And you propose to break it by making it apply to silver dollars as well as to greenbacks?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The proposition of this measure is to break the endless chain in the greenback redemption and prohibits the reissue except in exchange for the same coin in which it is redeemed, and the only exception is that to which I have referred.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then you propose to aid the breaking of the endless chain by adding to the denominations of currency that are to be made a charge upon gold?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I expect the gentleman will be heard in the argument on his side, and which I fancy his brain is now working on. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. When was it that the Government first redeemed silver certificates in gold, or have they done so at any time?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Government never has redeemed silver dollars in gold, and this bill does not provide for the redemption of silver dollars in gold. Every silver dollar ever issued by this Government has been based upon a declaration by Congressional act to maintain its parity and interchangeability with gold. I refer the gentleman to the law of November 1, 1893, which contained a provision that the silver dollar should be maintained at a parity and interchangeable value with gold. We make no provision for final redemption at all, but for the purposes of establishing beyond controversy and without evasion the parity which we have by numerous acts pledged ourselves to maintain we say that that parity is best maintained by the absolute interchangeability of the moneys.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I do not captiously desire to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I know. We propose to have the bills of larger denominations withdrawn and smaller ones issued in their place, so that they may be more readily obtained. [Applause.]

There have been coined into silver dollars the total sum of $490,388,614. Experience has shown that a greater number of silver dollars have been coined than the people care to accept. They fail to be absorbed by general trade, and are largely used as a pledge for the issue of silver certificates, which are preferred.

Of the total silver coinage there were, on September 30, 1899, in silver certificates $405,197,504 and in silver dollars $85,191,110 in circulation.

Of this number there were on that date held by the Treasury $5,023,285 silver dollars, leaving upon that date in actual circulation only $90,167,825 of silver dollars.

Mr. GAINES. How many certificates?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Four hundred and five millions.

By the withdrawal from circulation of all one, two, and five dollars of greenbacks and Treasury notes, reissuing the same into larger denominations, and the reissue of the silver certificates of large denominations into one, two, and five dollar certificates, it would not only make a creditable and honorable place for the use of silver, but would at the same time make provision for a larger number of small notes, which the growing business of the country has greatly demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to complete his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Indiana may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. And that the time be charged to that side—that is, the difference in the time be charged to that side.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I have no kind of objection to the gentleman's time being extended. He is to be followed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], and I would like to have it understood that the same courtesy be extended to him.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Whatever time I consume on this side is chargeable to our division of the time.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Precisely; and if the gentleman from Georgia occupied an hour and any gentleman in the House should object, although his time is chargeable to this side, his speech would terminate. Therefore I desire to couple with the request that the gentleman from Indiana be allowed to complete his remarks that the gentleman from Georgia shall also be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. With the understanding that whatever time he consumes shall be charged to that side.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. That is perfectly understood.

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I speak of the use of silver certificates rather than the use of the silver dollars for the reason that experience has shown that the people do not care to accept the silver dollar in large numbers in circulation.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not a fact that the people also prefer gold certificates to the gold, just as they prefer the silver certificates to the silver coin?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It has not been so demonstrated, because the issue of gold certificates has been limited, and under the law can not be issued except when the gold reserve is above a fixed amount. And I will say, further, that all forms of paper money have a popular sentiment among the people, and when things are in normal condition and when these certificates are reduced below $10 they will have a hold on the trade of the people, and it will be so held in circulation in everyday transactions that it will be nearly impossible for any considerable amount of silver certificates to be presented at one time for exchange.

The Government has repeatedly made effort at vast expense to force the silver dollar into circulation by paying express charges for transportation of the same from the mints into the channels of trade, but without apparently making much impression upon the public mind, which greatly prefers the certificates representing the silver dollars. The efforts of the Government for the past fourteen years in this respect are set forth in the following table:

Shipments of silver coin from the Treasury offices and mints during each fiscal year from 1886, and charges thereon for transportation.

Fiscal year.	Standard dollars.	Fractional coin.	Total.	Charges.	Rate per thousand.

Of the total amount of silver coined by the Government to September 30, 1899, viz, $490,388,614, there were in silver dollar pieces $85,191,110 and in silver certificates in one, two, and five dollars, $175,064,553, leaving the sum of $230,132,951 to be given and used in the pocket trade of the people if the larger denominations of silver certificates should be reissued in denominations of one, two, and five dollars, as shown by the following table:

Silver dollar pieces (September 30, 1899)	$85,191,110
One-dollar notes other than silver certificates	13,320,824
Two-dollar notes other than silver certificates	11,109,732
Five-dollar notes other than silver certificates	166,144,562
Silver certificates of $1, $2, and $5	175,064,553
Total under $5	470,830,791
National-bank notes of $1, $2, and $5	75,990,505
	546,821,296
Total silver dollars coined (September 30, 1899)	490,388,614
Silver dollar pieces	$85,191,110
Silver certificates in $1, $2, and $5	175,064,553
	260,255,663
Remaining to be given a use	230,132,951
Held by the Treasury (September 30, 1899):
Silver dollar pieces	5,023,285
Silver certificates	4,610,821
	9,634,106
Not to be kept in circulation	220,498,845

There can be little question but the two provisions before mentioned, of making the silver actually interchangeable with gold and scattering it through the medium of certificates into the daily transactions of the business of the people, will very largely, if not completely, avoid any possible danger of their presentation in any considerable amounts at the Government counter for exchange.

SUBSIDIARY COINS.

The law enacted July 23, 1876, limits the issue of subsidiary coins to $50,000,000. The growth of our business has developed such a demand for small change that, notwithstanding the limitation fixed by statute, subsidiary coins have so increased that on September 30, 1899, there was outstanding $76,523,333.

This excess issue, certainly necessary, should be legalized, and further coinage of subsidiary coins left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Owing to the great supply of silver bullion purchased under the law of July 14, 1890, it appears that such supply can be safely drawn upon for such coinage of subsidiary coins as shall be necessary for our trade, and a corresponding amount of Treasury notes canceled. The recoinage of worn and uncurrent coins is provided for only by the annual appropriation bills, and is sufficiently important to justify a permanent statute.

SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The proposed bill gives authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue or reissue United States notes or Treasury notes, in denominations not less than $1, as he may prescribe, and provides that all silver certificates hereafter issued or paid out shall be in denominations only of $1, $2, and $5.

Two objects are sought by this: First, to empower the Secretary of the Treasury with discretion for the supply of small notes to meet the demands of the business world as the same shall arise. This necessity has been prominent of late on account of the vastly increased business of the country, requiring change in small transactions. Under the present law the Secretary of the Treasury does not possess this discretion, but is required to reissue such notes in the same denominations as redeemed, and the rigid enforcement of the law greatly embarrasses general business where such demand for small notes exists. While provision is made for the issue of United States notes and Treasury notes of such denominations, not less than $1, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, yet it is presumed that such discretion will be exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury only for the purpose of meeting an urgent demand for small notes and that, in the absence of such emergency, silver certificates will largely comprise the note issue of the Government under $10. Rather than operate as a restriction of the note issues under $10, such provision will afford a relief by an increase of circulation of small notes.

The second object of this provision is to break up the large silver certificates. The breaking up of the large silver certificates will place upon silver, either in the dollar or in the certificates representing the silver dollars, a great proportion of the burden of daily business transactions, and thus so scatter the certificates that, even if an effort were made to embarrass the Treasury by their presentation for exchange, the difficulty of procuring them would very largely, if not completely, defeat such effort.

The total amount in silver certificates on September 30, 1899, was $405,197,504, of which $175,064,553 was in denominations under $10. The total number of silver dollars coined up to September 30, 1899, was $490,388,614, so that on that day there were outstanding $5,191,110 silver dollars. Of this last sum there was held by the Treasury, unrepresented by certificates, $5,023,285, leaving but $80,167,825 actually in circulation. If the field of daily business transactions, or the "pocket trade," shall be given over to silver, it would be quickly absorbed and, once distributed, would become the permanent medium of exchange in small transactions among our people. It could fill no greater nor more honorable use.

The total amount of our money on September 30, 1899, in denominations under $10 (except the fractional currency, subsidiary coin, and gold dollars) was $470,830,791, divided as follows:

Silver dollars, unrepresented by silver certificates	$5,191,110
Silver certificates	175,064,553
Greenbacks	82,289,173
Treasury notes of 1890	52,235,450
National-bank notes	75,990,505

The breaking up of the silver certificates over $5 would increase the money in denominations under $10 by $230,132,951. But the discretionary power given the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the issue of greenbacks and Treasury notes in denominations under $10 renders possible the withdrawal from circulation of such denominations of the greenback and Treasury note aggregating $134,584,623 and their reissue in larger denominations. Hence the minimum of increase of small notes would be the difference between the total amount of silver certificates over $5, or $230,132,951, and the aggregate of the greenbacks and Treasury notes under $10, or $134,584,623 which is $95,548,328. If the national-bank notes under $10 should be converted into larger denominations, the minimum increase of small notes would be but $19,557,823, an insufficient increase of small notes, and hence the denominations of the bank notes remain undisturbed by the bill.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I prefer, Mr. Chairman, not to yield at the present time, because I am trespassing on the indulgence of the committee now.

Mr. COX. Very well.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The demand for money of small denominations has been most urgent, and it is believed that the cash transactions of the people will give employment to the increase here provided without increasing the strain upon the Treasury.

BANKS.

The proposed measure makes no change in the general banking laws. Indeed, a studied effort has been made to effect a complete guaranty of the quality and parity of our money without any disturbance in the quantity or kind. But, without changing in any form the circulation or kinds of money, three propositions are made concerning banks, which seek rather to correct recognized defects than to in any way make original propositions.

BANK-NOTE CIRCULATION.

The proposition to allow national banks to issue circulation to the par value of the bonds deposited for their security is neither new nor partisan. It has been recommended by four Presidents and five Secretaries of the Treasury, and bills containing such provision have been introduced in Congress and supported by members of both political parties. It is entirely consistent with the present banking system. The same reasons which justify the issue of 90 per cent of the bonds will justify an issue to the par value of the bonds. The only objection advanced, aside from that of demagogic attack generally upon banks, is that it permits too large an increase of the volume of circulation and threatens an inflation.

But it is unfair to compare the amount possible under the proposed bill with the amount of bank notes now in circulation. The lack of profit upon bank-note circulation because of the tax has reduced such circulation far below the amount ever expected, and such reduction can be creditably charged to a contraction which was equally unexpected. The proper comparison is between the amount possible under the present law and the amount possible under the proposed amendment, which would be but a 10 per cent increase, an amount which can be easily absorbed by the business of the country and utilized in as many different money centers as there are national banks. The proposition is sound in logic, safe in practice, and more consistent with the system in vogue than the present law.

TAX UPON BANK FRANCHISES.

The repeal of the tax upon national-bank notes and the substitution of a tax upon bank franchises as measured by their capital, surplus, and undivided profits, are proposed in a spirit of fairness and for a just distribution of the burden of the tax. Under the present law every national bank must deposit at least $12,500 in bonds, being 25 per cent of the minimum of the capital stock ($50,000) with which a national bank may be organized. Experience shows that the metropolitan banks issue the least circulation, many of them issuing none, depending upon the large deposits for their loanable capital. Very often these deposits are largely increased by country banks establishing reserve agencies. On the contrary, the small banks, forced to draw heavily upon their capital to make safe provision for their different reserve funds, are compelled to issue note circulation to insure a reasonable loanable fund, and suffer in the transaction by paying the circulation tax in greater degree, in proportion to their capital, than the larger and better-equipped city banks.

The per cent fixed for the tax, one-tenth of 1 per cent semiannually, will produce substantially the same revenue realized under the present law. The revenue received from the present tax during five years last past was $9,469,948.39, while the proposed tax upon the same banks for the same period would have been $9,778,858.12, the difference being, through a period of five years, only $308,909.73. The beneficial results of this proposition will be that the larger banks will pay the tax in the same degree as the smaller banks, while the amount of revenue will be practically unchanged.

SMALL BANKS.

The proposed amendment authorizing the organization of banks with capital as low as $25,000 in places containing no greater population than 2,000 is designed to meet the demand coming from the sparsely settled districts of the country and the small but growing towns for banking accommodations.

By authorizing the establishment of banks of small capital in small communities money will be held in the country districts where it can be used at the seasons of the year when it is most in demand. Not only will the supply be bettered, but interest rates will be made lower by reason of the change. Under the present law national banks can not be organized with less capital than $50,000, and the consequence is that the amount required for the purchase of bonds and the reserve funds have operated against the establishment of national banks in small communities. The bill proposes to change this in the way named in the hope of creating money centers of small degree in various localities, where the convenience of the system will greatly aid in the movement of crops at seasons of the year when, under present methods, money for short-time loans is procured only with difficulty, attended with increased interest rates.

The advocates of currency reform firmly declare that the financial operations of the Government are upon the gold standard, but that the honest fears engendered by doubtful legislation relative to silver coinage and the persistent attack upon the standard of value fully justify the legislation asked. To firmly fix gold as the standard of value in unequivocal terms, made fully operative by all proper safeguards, is the central idea of the law proposed. It is confidently believed that the country demands it and that our action will be ratified by the people.

The supporters of the proposition are not confined to the Republican party, nor to the so-called "money centers." Democrats of courage and conviction have nobly dared to break from party lines and suffer, unflinchingly, the sting of the party whip in honest and patriotic effort to uphold the integrity of the national credit and make secure the foundation of the vast and expanding business of our people. The American people in the great agricultural fields of the country are fully awake to the importance of the subject and appreciate the wisdom of the legislation. Nearly all of those who wavered in 1896 corrected their error in 1898.

While the question is economic and should be separated from partisan debate, yet the Republican party will not attempt escape from responsibility for the legislation, believing that it is wise for the country, safe for the people, and in perfect harmony with the institutions of the nation. Whatever attitude has been assumed by the Republican party toward silver coinage has been controlled by conditions which existed at the time and which seemed best for the interests of the country. Every possible effort was made to render full test toward fixing the relation of silver and grant the fullest opportunity to demonstrate the ability of the Government to provide the largest possible coinage of the metal without endangering the stability of the standard. This effort extended in good faith to conferences looking to international agreements, but without success. But when it became evident that the gold standard was endangered there was neither hesitation nor halting upon the part of the Republican party, which promptly and courageously declared for the maintenance of the existing gold standard. The year 1896 marked the limit of patient experiment. Since then the party has been pronounced in its position and is to-day united in its effort to firmly fix this standard without equivocation or evasion. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, certain tables, together with a statement in analysis of the bill.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I make no objection, providing leave is granted for a certain number of days, say ten days, for other members to print their remarks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. MADDOX. I think that will have to be done in the House, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CANNON). The gentleman is correct about it.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that I shall be permitted to ask the gentleman from Indiana for his construction of section 2.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not the floor now, so that I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. MADDOX) is recognized.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the members of this House that it was either my fortune or misfortune, I am not certain which, to be on the Banking and Currency Committee in the last House of Representatives. I heard a great deal of talk about the currency and about the single gold standard and various other things connected with banking. There were many bills presented to that committee for its consideration, and each individual presenting those bills thought, as a matter of course, that his was the proper one. But it is a matter of history that that committee failed to evolve any bill that met with the entire sanction of the Republican party on this floor at that time.

It is a part of the history of the country that the Fifty-fifth Congress, before its adjournment, appointed—that is, the Republican party in a Republican caucus appointed—a committee for the purpose of drafting a bill to present to this Congress, and the newspapers tell us that they met down on the seashore and various and divers other places and prepared this bill that is now presented to this House. So it will be seen that these gentlemen have had ever since the adjournment of the last Congress to consider this bill and to prepare themselves to defend it. And when this Congress convened they come in with a gag rule and call on us within two days from the time the bill is presented to answer their well-matured plan, which took them from nine to ten months to consummate, and then we are told that we are dealt fairly with on this side.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] undertook to justify the rule that is imposed on this side of the House by citing certain precedents in the Fifty-third Congress. But what were those precedents? The very questions that were determined there—in other words, the bills submitted to the House and supposed to be passed upon in the limit of time he mentions—had been discussed day after day in the Fifty-third Congress before that bill went to the Senate, and for two or three long months were discussed in the Senate; and yet they cite that as a precedent why the Democrats should be bound and gagged with this rule, and that, too, on a question of so vast importance as this bill presented to us to-day. I want to say to the members of this House that if I have analyzed this bill correctly, if I understand it, there is no measure that has been presented to the American Congress in the last half century that is fraught with so much that is dangerous to people of this country in remote sections, even to the great centers of this Republic. And then to think that under these conditions we are absolutely gagged, as I might say, under the present rules that have been adopted by the majority of the House.

But I desire to call your attention to another fact before I proceed to discuss this bill. I read in the newspapers the other day that there was a banquet held over in New York at which our late leader on that side of the House—and a leader he was—Mr. Reed, of Maine, was present. He was invited to respond to the toast, I believe, "Finances of our country." Among other things he said, he undertook to analyze the late vote that was had in Ohio for governor, and he told those people present that there was nothing in that vote to encourage the Republican party that they had a cinch on the Government by any means, and that if they wanted the gold standard enacted into a law they had better be about it right away [laughter on the Democratic side]; that the Republicans had a majority of both Houses and the President. So I take it that the faithful sent the word abroad that it was necessary to do this thing at once if it was done at all.

So I presume that this is the excuse, Mr. Chairman, for this "rush" order for the legislation now before us. Now, it is a very singular fact that a country which is so prosperous as we have been led to believe that this country is at the present time by the message of the President of the United States should need such legislation as this. This condition of prosperity has been claimed by the President himself and by statesmen on the other side of the House. They claim that the gold standard is already existing. They claim that this is really the source of our present degree of prosperity. Why rush, then, into the House of Representatives a gag rule, so as to shut off the minority and force through a bill of this character which is now pending, when, according to your own statement and the statement of your own political friends, there is no necessity for it? Is there any special or peculiar reason why this legislation should be so hurried, as you now propose it shall be, other than that you are afraid of the people and propose to take Mr. Reed's advice?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose with these few preliminary remarks to get down to the facts, to consider the bill itself in all of its details, and I want to say now, in the beginning of my remarks, that I shall not discuss the advantages or the disadvantages of the gold standard, to which the gentleman from Indiana who has just taken his seat has devoted so much time. I shall leave that question for the consideration and analysis of some other gentlemen on this side of the Chamber. I propose to address myself briefly to the workings of the pending bill, if enacted into law, as I understand its operations; and I crave the attention of Representatives on this side of the House, and on that side as well, for, with all due respect to your ability and intelligence, I do not believe you gentlemen who have in caucus determined to support the bill understand all of the features embodied therein.

The first section of the bill provides for the single gold standard. The question has been discussed somewhat before, I believe, but has never been approved by or submitted for the approval of the people of the United States.

May I not stop here, Mr. Chairman, to say that in the last national convention—of 1896—that we had in this country the Republican party at St. Louis adopted a bimetallic platform, or a platform favoring the free coinage of silver under an international agreement?

May I not say that at Chicago the Democratic party adopted a similar provision, but without demanding the aid or interposition of any other nation? Over 12,000,000 people voted on these two propositions, and 300,000, I believe, or about that number, voted on the proposition of a single gold standard, and carried one little militia district in the United States!

Who is it that demands the single gold standard to-day? The gentleman from Indiana who has just taken his seat [Mr. OVERSTREET] says that long before silver was demonetized by the act of 1873 the monetary and commercial interests of the country discussed the subject. Now, the financial interests of the country have discussed this bill that is presented to us for our consideration to-day. The great body of the people of this country—those people who pay the taxes, who must meet the burdens, the expenditures of the country, these people who have fought for the flag of the country, and are expected to protect it—have not been consulted in regard thereto. [Applause on Democratic side.] And we are told, sir, by the gentleman who has just taken his seat that the gold standard exists to-day, and has been so recognized by this Administration. Now, if the gold standard exists to-day it exists by reason of the usurpation of a party, and without any authorization of any existing law of the land. [Applause on Democratic side.] But, as the gentleman from Indiana candidly admits, this first section has for its purpose to make that lawful which these officers of the Government have done without authority of law. But I propose to refer to this proposition a little later on—that is, to show what is the demand for the legislation now proposed.

The second section of the bill proposes to strike the word "coin" from every promise to pay and every obligation which has been made by the people of the United States. Every sort of liability which has been contracted by the Government of the United States in pursuance of law is to be ultimately redeemed in gold. The purpose of the present legislation is to apply to the bonded indebtedness of the people, which is payable in coin, the word "gold," to strike out the word "coin" and to amend all of these obligations by inserting in lieu thereof the word "gold." That is one of the propositions of the pending bill. That is the purpose of it. The word "coin" is to be stricken from every obligation that is given by the United States and "gold" inserted in lieu thereof. For what purpose? Why, Mr. Chairman, the purpose is obvious. The purpose is to change the contract which was made with the people of the United States, with the holders of these obligations, thereby making those bonds more valuable and enriching the already rich at the expense of the people. The purpose is to make the gold standard the basis on which all of the contracts and obligations of the Government shall be based. I apprehend that no gentleman will stand on this floor and sincerely suggest a doubt as to the purpose of the pending legislation.

Now, what are we to do? In the first place, we must remember that the proposition here is to strike from every contract of indebtedness, that the toiling masses of this country will have to pay ultimately, the word "coin" and insert in lieu thereof the word "gold." Who has consulted the great mass of the American people in order to find out whether such a proposition as that does or does not meet their approbation?

Where did you get the authority? Did you get it from the great toiling millions who pay the taxes of the country? I think you have been consulting the financial circles again on that subject, and that you are doing their bidding only.

The third section of the bill authorizes the establishment of a division of the Treasury to carry out this scheme. Now, you understand, gentlemen, there is a new division to be established in the Treasury for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this bill. In other words, one great banking institution is to be established by the United States to serve the purpose of the national banks of this country, to furnish them security for their banking ventures, and where they may at will speculate on the money of final redemption placed there by the toil of the people. That is what it means, no more and no less. This section further provides that—

There shall be transferred from the general fund in the Treasury of the United States, and taken up on the books of said division as a redemption fund, the amount of gold coin and bullion held against outstanding gold certificates, the amount of United States notes held against outstanding currency certificates, the amount of silver dollars held against outstanding silver certificates, the amount in silver dollars and silver bullion held against outstanding Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890.

All these are to be transferred to this new division in the Treasury. It will be observed that the silver bullion and silver dollars held for redemption of the Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890 are to be impounded completely and retired from circulation, for they are now to be redeemed in gold, and that—an amount of gold coin and bullion to constitute a reserve fund equal to 25 per cent of the amount, both of United States notes and Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, outstanding.

Now, you understand by this proposition, gentlemen, that in this new division, while all this bullion and specie and these United States notes that are held for the purpose of redeeming outstanding certificates that have been issued upon this bullion and gold and silver and United States notes are to be transferred to this division, here is a provision that 25 per cent of gold shall be transferred to this new division for a reserve fund; that is, 25 per cent of all outstanding Treasury certificates issued under the act of 1890 and the currency known as United States notes and more commonly known as greenbacks.

Now, I have a report here which will show exactly how much outstanding money of this character we have, and all you have to do is to find 25 per cent of these Treasury notes and of the greenbacks outstanding, and you will find how much gold we must keep up in this new division of the Treasury along with this vast sum of money that is to be transferred to that division.

Mr. COX. Will my colleague allow me just there for one moment?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Let us get this point out clearly, so that we will understand it. Now, there is 25 per cent to be transferred into this new bureau there, as a kind of redemption fund.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. COX. Now, has your mind been called to the point, Where do they get that 25 per cent from?

Mr. MADDOX. Where do they get it from?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. I am going to explain that to you. They have a scheme to get it mighty easy.

Mr. COX. I understand that they are going to get it by issuing bonds.

Mr. MADDOX. Oh, I understand. There is no trouble about getting it.

Now, in addition to that, this bill provides that in transferring from one division to what they call the general fund we must keep—and that is something that we must at all times keep in view—we must keep not less than $50,000,000 in the other end of the Treasury. Now, add that sum to the 25 per cent of these outstanding notes, with this other vast sum of money, and you will find what it is that they propose to impound in the Treasury of the United States and to hold there.

The bill requires that all gold and gold bullion held against outstanding certificates of the United States, notes held against outstanding currency certificates, all the silver dollars held against outstanding certificates, the amount held in silver dollars and silver bullion against outstanding Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890, 25 per cent in gold of all outstanding United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890, and not less than $50,000,000 of the general fund are to be held in the Treasury at all times. That is in the third section.

Now I want to call your attention to section 4 of this bill. That section proceeds to turn over to the Secretary of the Treasury the earth and the fullness thereof. He is directed to maintain the gold reserve at all hazards. He may issue and sell bonds whenever in his judgment it is necessary to maintain the reserve fund, payable in gold, and without limit, so that the interest does not exceed 3 per cent, and that they are made payable in gold. Now, gentlemen, in this connection I want to call your attention to the act under which these gentlemen have been selling United States bonds and bringing gold into the Treasury, and then let you compare this act with the one that they propose to enact now. Now, listen:

On and after the 1st day of January, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem in coin the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenue from time to time in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of at not less than par in coin either of the description of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870.

Now, gentlemen, that is the law under which the bonds of the people have been sold in order to keep up what they call a gold reserve in the Treasury of the United States.

Notwithstanding we had millions of dollars of coin, as defined by the statutes of this country, in the Treasury at this time for the redemption of outstanding obligations, they assumed to say that under and by virtue of this provision of law the Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to issue the people's bonds, or the people's promises to pay, and to buy gold, when every debt that was then outstanding was redeemable in coin, and according to the law of the land silver was coin, and there was an abundance of coin and bullion to have met every obligation.

When I hear gentlemen on that side of the House discussing the existing gold standard, as they call it, I am reminded that under a statute in Georgia if a man can hold a piece of property in peaceable and adverse possession for twenty years it gives him a perfect title; but there is never a minute during that time that that fellow is not uneasy for fear some other fellow is going to take the land away from him by virtue of a title; and that is exactly the proposition here. You want to get this bill enacted into law and, by your usurped authority in depreciating silver, establish what you call the existing gold standard before the people can have the opportunity to place a party in power that respects the law and will compel you to disgorge your unauthorized and illegal possessions, gained under what you call an existing gold standard that never existed except by arbitrary power exercised by the Treasury.

Now, gentlemen, is there any law or any interpretation that can be given to this section by which the President of the United States is authorized to go out and barter the bonds of the people for gold when he has got coin in the Treasury that will meet the demands under the laws of the country and pay the indebtedness according to the contract? Besides, it is only meant to redeem United States notes, commonly known as greenbacks.

Now, this law proposes to issue gold bonds at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; and I say there is no limit upon his power, except that they shall be made payable in gold and that they shall not bear more than 3 per cent interest. Now, I think I will be able a little later on to show you why this power is unlimited. The facilities in this bill for raiding the Treasury of the United States have never been equaled on earth and never will be again, I think.

Section 5: This section provides that the United States notes, commonly known as greenbacks and Treasury notes, issued under the act of 1890, presented for redemption, shall be redeemed in gold now at the will of the holders, and that the silver certificates shall be redeemed in accordance with the existing law.

Now, gentlemen, in order to understand this scheme that they have now you must understand the law as it exists to-day. These Treasury notes and these greenback notes to-day, under the laws of the United States, are redeemable in coin, silver, and gold, as the Stanley Matthew's resolution provides, and when they are redeemed they are to be reissued and put in circulation again.

What is the effect of this bill? The meaning of this bill, if enacted into law, is that these certificates, greenbacks, and Treasury notes—these greenbacks, when they are paid in, have to remain impounded in the Treasury of the United States until you present gold to take them out. Under the laws to-day—that is to say, if the laws of this country were obeyed—they could be redeemed in silver and gold alike, and when once redeemed they could be reissued again and sent forth to the country to increase the circulation. So that you see in this measure they propose not only to make them payable in gold, but it is a scheme to decrease the circulation. It decreases the circulation exactly to the amount of gold that to the extent and amount of certificates that are in existence, because when you present the greenbacks for redemption you draw from the Treasury the gold and these greenbacks remain impounded. There is no way for them to be returned to circulation until you take gold back and buy them out again. Under the existing law they are required to be reissued, and they would go out to pay the expenses of the Government and enter into circulation again. This bill, if enacted into law, will forbid that.

Under this law every greenback, every Treasury note, and every silver dollar issued is to be exchangeable for gold, only, so far as silver is concerned, the silver dollar is to be exchanged with the holder of the certificate when the silver dollar is on a parity with gold. Now, that is what it means. If the silver dollar, when you carry silver certificates to the Treasury for redemption, is at a parity with gold, you are expected to accept a silver dollar for your silver certificate. Why had not they just as well say eggs or any other old thing, if on a parity with gold. Now, that is the purpose of this bill, so far as the silver certificate is concerned, and, gentlemen, if this bill is enacted into law, mark you, that I prophesy to-day that within less than five years every silver dollar except the subsidiary coin will be confiscated and practically sent to the junk shop. They have provided easy ways for it in this measure.

My honest opinion is that, upon reading this bill, if your party on that side of the House had been sincere they would have ordered the silver to the block and sold it for gold, thus realizing as much out of the wreck you propose as possible for the people. What is the use to have a silver dollar in the Treasury at all that you say costs 50 cents, when a little piece of paper that probably will not cost one-hundredth part of a cent answers the same purpose? Why do you want to trouble the people to take that piece of paper to the Treasury and get a silver dollar for it and then take that silver dollar and draw a gold dollar on it? But gentlemen say they do not propose to redeem the silver in gold. Gentlemen, it does not matter what they propose; it does not matter what construction you put upon this law; when you turn it over to the parties that are to be benefited by it you will find what construction will be placed upon it.

I say to-day if it is possible for the United States Treasury to construe the law as it has done in order to depreciate the silver dollar, as it has done, it is possible to construe a law to mean almost anything. Now, they say in this bill that silver is not to be disturbed, its legal-tender quality is still to be maintained, but just along a little bit further you will find a masked battery under the polite word of "exchange." And when these national banks get hold of that battery they will turn it upon the Treasurer of the United States, exchange every silver dollar in it for one of gold, if the Secretary of the Treasury has to mortgage this country to its full value to raise the gold to accomplish this purpose, and they will disparage this money to such an extent that it will be practically worthless in a few years.

It will be seen that our whole financial structure is based on the gold in the Treasury, and the gold in the Treasury had, and to be had, depends on the ability of the Treasurer to exchange the promises of the people to pay in gold with interest produced by the labor of the toiling millions of this country. In other words, if these notes are redeemed in gold—and who would expect anything else when gold is the standard—you must carry that same kind of coin back to get your greenbacks or your Treasury notes from the Treasury.

Now, it would seem from a casual reading of the bill that, if silver certificates are presented for redemption, they are to be redeemed in silver, but as a matter of fact they are to be redeemed in gold, or "exchanged," to use their polite term.

Section 8 provides that section 5159 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be repealed, and that section 8 of this bill shall be substituted therefor. Now, the section, gentlemen, to be repealed—and I call your especial attention to this—reads this way:

SEC. 5159. Every association, after having complied with the provisions of this title, preliminary to the commencement of the banking business, and before it shall be authorized to commence banking business under this title, shall transfer and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States any United States registered bonds, bearing interest, to an amount not less than $30,000 and not less than one-third of the capital stock paid in. Such bonds shall be received by the Treasurer upon deposit, and shall be by him safely kept in his office, until they shall be otherwise disposed of, in pursuance of the provisions of this title.

That means, gentlemen, that before any man or any association can commence banking business in this country they must at least purchase $30,000 of the registered bonds of the United States before they can begin business. It further says not less than one-third of the capital stock paid in. Now, let me draw this illustration for you—this is a law that exists to-day—and then I will talk about the amendment. Suppose a man has a bank with a capital stock paid in of a million dollars. He is required to purchase three hundred and thirty-three and one-third thousand dollars of bonds.

Mr. BROSIUS. No; only two hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. MADDOX. I am talking about the law as it now stands. They have got to purchase three hundred and thirty-three and one-third thousand dollars registered bonds of the United States before they can proceed to business. Now, this law, if I understand it, only requires the national bank, the million-dollar bank, to purchase $50,000 of registered bonds before beginning business; those that are of $150,000 or less shall purchase one-quarter of the capital stock paid in of registered bonds of the United States. Now, gentlemen, if I am correct, the bill further provides the method by which these gentlemen can withdraw their bonds from the United States Treasury that they have deposited before. For instance, a bank has purchased $333,000 of bonds and issued certificates on that amount, which money is in circulation to-day. This new bill provides that these gentlemen can call in their circulating medium down to the extent of $50,000 and go to the Treasury and turn it over to the Treasurer and withdraw the bonds they have deposited heretofore, by that means contracting the currency of the country at will. That is what it means.

I want to call your attention to the fact that while every method is offered here in this bill for contracting the currency, there is no way by which the currency can be increased except upon the authority granted the national banks, who will have the right to issue the certificates to the limit of the bonds they take out. It is left entirely to the discretion of the banks. They throw that sop to us and tell us in towns of less than 2,000 inhabitants they will allow the organization of banks with $25,000 capital, and we are supposed to be content with that.

But you will remember, gentlemen, that they do not propose in this bill anywhere to compel these bankers to issue the certificates to the full amount of the bonds they take out, or to the full amount of bonds they are authorized to take out. That is left entirely discretionary with them, but they may withdraw their circulation altogether if they want to; they need not issue a dollar if they do not want to. They make provisions by which the currency issued by the Government may be impounded and withdrawn from circulation, and the only means of increasing the circulation in the bill is left to the option of the national bankers. If they withdrew their circulation and produced a panic in 1893, when there was no law by which the national currency could be impounded, what will they do when our whole finances are turned over to them? It is to their interest to make money scarce and as high as possible. Our experience with them in 1893-94, that as soon as the panic which they had inaugurated for political purposes got beyond their control they closed their doors and proved their incapacity to meet the situation. Are we to learn nothing by experience?

Now, what is the difficulty in the pending bill? As I say, you have a method in its construction. You have in every way provided against the increase in circulation. You have every door barred to an increase in the circulation in the country. The whole business tends not to increase the circulation of the money of the people of the country, but the operation of the whole proposition is to put the people absolutely in the hands of the national bankers.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman allow an interruption just there?

Mr. MADDOX. I would prefer to proceed in my own time without interruption.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question. Whether it is not a fact that that identical statement that he has just made, and which he also made a few moments ago, that the bill tended to contract the currency of the country, was not made in the last Presidential campaign by almost every silver speaker on the platforms in every part of the United States?

Mr. MADDOX. I will state to the gentleman frankly that I never heard it or suggested it myself.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Did you not contend that if we went to a gold standard it would contract the currency because of the diminishing product of gold? Did you not make that statement through your party organs and platform speakers?

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know that such statement was made to my personal knowledge.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It was so stated.

Mr. MADDOX. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed—
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH (continuing). It was stated in the last campaign, and it was made an argument by some stump speakers, but, as a matter of fact, in place of being an accurate statement, the circulating medium has increased largely throughout the country.

Mr. MADDOX. So you say.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do say it, and can prove it.

Mr. TERRY. Does the gentleman from Michigan forget the fact that the output of gold is nearly doubled?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the gentleman from Georgia deny that the circulation has increased?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What kind of circulation?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Gold, silver, and paper money.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I object to a speech being inserted in the body of my remarks. The gentleman will have ample time in his own right to make any suggestions he pleases to make upon this subject.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I only asked the gentleman to state "yes or no." But he denies that the circulation has increased.

Mr. MADDOX. I am perfectly willing to take the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury. I will not deny his statement. He so states in his report.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You want to familiarize yourself with the subject before you undertake to make a speech on the money question.

Mr. MADDOX. Perhaps I am informed, if the gentleman will wait.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You do not seem to be.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I prefer to proceed in my own way without interruption.

Section 8 provides for a change in section 5159 of the Revised Statutes by amending it so as to read: "That every association, after having complied with the provisions of this title, preliminary to the commencement of the banking business, and before it shall be authorized to commence the banking business, under this title shall transfer and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States as security for its circulating notes any United States registered bonds, bearing interest, to an amount, where the capital is $150,000 or less, not less than one-fourth of the capital, and $50,000 where the capital is in excess of $150,000."

This section also provides that such bond shall be received by the Treasurer upon deposit, and goes on further to provide that banks having on deposit bonds in excess of that amount are authorized to reduce their circulation by the deposit of lawful money as provided by law. The section also provides that the amount of such notes issued by any national banking association shall not exceed in any case the par value of the bonds deposited as herein provided. That is to say, that any association which enters into the business of banking may exercise its own volition in the matter and does not need to issue a dollar of circulation unless they desire to do so, or they can, on the other hand, issue circulation to the full extent of the par value of the bonds purchased by them. The law says they shall not exceed that amount in circulation, but shall be confined to the amount of the bonds purchased, leaving it entirely within their discretion to enlarge or to contract the currency, as they may see fit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just asked me a question about the circulation or about the contraction of the currency has suggested that we contended for that in the last Democratic canvass. Now I propose to call the attention of the House to something that your side contended for in that same canvass. You did not contend for the single gold standard then.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman from Georgia challenges the issue in my Congressional district, I will state to him that he is entirely mistaken, for that was actually the issue made there.

Mr. MADDOX. I am challenging the position of your party upon this section.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman challenges the statement I have made, I will state now plainly that we made the issue in that campaign in my district broadly upon that question.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, it was against your platform, and I am going to prove it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is in the House. I call the attention of all the members on this side who heard it to the fact that a few days ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in discussing the rule under which we are now acting, said that the Republican party would have to turn aside from nothing it advocated in 1896 in advocating this bill. I propose to challenge that statement and to bring witnesses to show that they will have to do so. Now, as I have already stated, in the great conventions that were held by the two parties in 1896 and in the contests that were fought out in this country the questions upon which those contests hinged were bimetalism by international agreement with the Republican party and bimetalism without the intervention of any other country with the Democratic party.

How well do I remember that in the last days of the Fifty-fourth Congress, just after the great campaign in 1896, a bill was sent into this House from the other body for the purpose of appointing a high commission to go to Europe to bring about international bimetalism, as the Republicans had pledged in their platform in 1896, in St. Louis. When that bill was reported to this House favorably from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Charles W. Stone], the proposition was attacked in this House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg], who said that your party was committed to the gold standard. He took issue with it. He attempted to defeat it, and in that he was joined by Mr. Johnson of Indiana, by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Knox], by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Henry], and, I think, by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] also.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of that side and of this side of the House to what these great Republican leaders said their pledges to the people were in 1896. I want to show you by what authority they come here to-day and propose to enact the gold standard and to fix it upon this country, and I want to show you what the proposition was that put them in office. I propose to show by the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] in this House that over 100 members owed their election to the Fifty-fifth Congress to the advocacy of the bimetallic standard by your party in 1896. I propose to show by that late lamented, great, and distinguished man, Mr. Dingley, of Maine, that it was a party pledge that you made and one that ought to be honestly carried out. I shall show by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] that the man who advocates anything to the contrary is an apostate from his party. Yet you come here to-day and tell the country that you are justified and authorized in establishing the gold standard for this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When I have shown that, I propose to show to you and to the country upon the highest evidence why it is that our commission in Europe failed to accomplish international bimetalism because of the intermeddling of the Cabinet officers of the present Administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BENTON. And the President as well.

Mr. MADDOX. And that you have not in good faith endeavored to carry out the pledges and the plans that you promised the people you would in 1896.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to introduce the witnesses. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read these extracts, unless some other gentleman will read them for me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read them if the gentleman desires.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, gentlemen, I call your attention to these utterances of the distinguished leaders on that side of the House. This is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Fifty-fourth Congress, just after the campaign of 1896, when these questions were fresh in the minds of these statesmen who addressed this House at that time. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] to interpret the Republican platform for me. [Applause.] I do not understand that document as he has attempted to interpret it here, and I do not believe that the Republicans of the United States understood it as he attempts to give it interpretation. I find in that platform, Mr. Speaker, a pledge that the Republican party would use all honorable exertions to labor to secure the very international agreement that is looked to in this bill. It must be remembered that the Republican party does not change its views every year, and that the Republican platform of 1896 is but a continuation of the platform of 1893. There is no material difference between them. Every declaration that you find in one you find clearly stated in the other, or find to be a fair and just implication from that which is stated.

In 1892 we expressly commended the efforts that were then being made by a Republican Administration in the direction of an international conference. When we made the declaration that we did make in the platform, that we would use all honest efforts to secure international agreement, every man understood that that was in continuation of the policy of the last Republican Administration, and through this very means of an international conference. That, I say, was the understanding of everyone. I want to disclaim again, Mr. Speaker, the right of the gentleman from New York to interpret the platform to mean that we pledged ourselves irrevocably to a gold standard and against the free coinage of silver. Our declaration ought not to be so construed by anyone. Here it is:

"The Republican party is unreservedly for sound money. It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payment."

"Specie payment," observe—not gold. It plumes itself upon that fact.

"Since then every dollar has been as good as gold. We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement."

"Except by international agreement." "Except" is the emphatic word. There is a pledge that we are in favor of the free coinage of silver through an international agreement. No man can escape that language. The platform goes on—

"except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained the existing gold standard must be preserved."

Do you find in that language an irrevocable pledge for all time to the gold standard? The pledge is that "until" we can secure this international agreement "which we pledge ourselves to promote," we will maintain the existing gold standard.

Mr. Speaker, with the views that I have of this platform, I could not utter the sentiments the gentleman from New York has uttered without regarding myself as an apostate from Republicanism and as recreant to the pledge. [Applause.]

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Dingley. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the six minutes which have been allotted to me I can only briefly suggest two reasons why I shall support the pending bill. First, it is in response to the clear, distinct, unequivocal pledge of the Republican party in the last campaign. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, sometimes resolutions are adopted in national conventions hastily and inconsiderately that have no binding force, but everyone who is acquainted with the circumstances under which the St. Louis convention was held understands that this feature of the platform was a clear, distinct, and well-considered declaration of the Republican party. [Applause.]

[Extract from Mr. GROSVENOR.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, important declarations in political platforms are never the result of accident, but are always the result of design. They are always born of conditions existing in the constituents of the party that gives the utterance. The Republican convention at St. Louis was a representative body of a great party in the country, and the men who went there and represented their several constituencies understood the conditions at home. They did not go to St. Louis to declare a platitude nor to make a mere declaration that was not demanded by existing conditions and that was not in consonance with the opinions of their constituents. The Republican party at the threshold of the campaign was met by the question of what should constitute its financial plank, and looking to what the party had done and what it had already pledged itself to do, it found that it had put into the statute book of the United States the declaration that the country pledged itself to the maintenance of the parity between gold and silver on November 1, 1890, when a Republican Congress, by the almost solid vote of its party in both Houses, repealed the Sherman purchasing clause and enacted the following:

"That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value."

That was the law of the United States of America when the St. Louis convention assembled and the platform was adopted, and yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] comes here and tells us that the Republican party is under no obligations in regard to the parity of this coinage, but is a single gold standard party. The compromises of the St. Louis convention produced the result that we have before us, and I want to read a single paragraph from the proceedings of that convention, which will show what the understanding of the representatives there present was when this plank was brought in.

Mr. HARDY. And the gentleman from New York was a delegate to that convention.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, I was, and voted for the platform and shall construe it in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does not need any construction. We did not need any construction of it during the campaign.

I was saying that more than 100 men who will ornament the next House of Representatives on the Republican side owe their election to that platform and an honest espousal of it before the masses of the people. [Applause.]

Now, what have we here? The Republican party on this floor is called upon to act to-day. This bill is here for action, not repudiation. This bill came from the gathered wisdom of its friends at the other end of the Capitol; it came in obedience to the voice of the Republican party. True, a great many men got on board of the Republican ship during last summer. Are we to turn from our own proposition because Democrats voted with us? Quite the reverse. When we saw them drowning in the water we gathered them up and took them ashore, and we have planted them on the rock of honest money and good government, and the Republican party owes nothing more to the men who have joined it for principle. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent to put certain of the paragraphs that I imperfectly read into my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the evidence there from the lips of these gentlemen shows conclusively that when Mr. Quigg and these other gentlemen would commit your party irrevocably to the gold standard, they refused to let them do so in the most emphatic terms, and declared that a hundred men upon that side of the House owed their seats to the advocacy of bimetalism in your platform. And I take it—I think I may legitimately do so—that had they advocated a different policy the President of the United States would not occupy the chair that he occupies to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I desire to call your attention to statements attributed by the newspapers to the President:

President McKinley, in a speech at Toledo, Ohio, on February 12, 1891, clearly expressed the operation of the theory of the demonetization of silver in the following language:

"During all of Grover Cleveland's years at the head of the Government he was dishonoring one of our precious metals, one of our own products, discrediting silver and enhancing the price of gold. He endeavored even before his inauguration to office to stop the coinage of silver dollars, and afterwards and to the end of his Administration persistently used his power to that end. He was determined to contract the circulating medium and to demote one of the coins of commerce, limit the volume of money among the people, make money scarce, and therefore dear. He would have increased the value of money and diminished the value of everything else—money the master, everything else the servant. He was not thinking of 'the poor' then. He had left 'their side.' He was not standing forth in their defense. Cheap costs, cheap labor, and dear money! The sponsor and promoter of these professing to stand guard over the welfare of the poor and lowly! Was there ever more inconsistency or reckless assumption!"

This question naturally arises, Who authorizes these gentlemen to bring this bill before Congress to fasten the gold standard upon the country? You will find that they will rise upon that side of the House and attempt to explain to you that they have tried to bring about international bimetalism. They made the attempt to do so, but the question is, Have they honestly made that attempt? I propose to let one of their own party men, a Senator in the United States Senate, and one of the high commissioners sent to Europe to bring about that result, answer that question for himself. Now I call your attention to a portion of Mr. WOLCOTT'S speech:

Here, Mr. President, I should naturally end this account of our negotiations, negotiations which are still pending and undetermined. The extraordinary statements, however, lately made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and which, unexplained, must seriously affect the future of any further attempts toward securing international action, require some reference at this time.

When Congress convened on the 6th of last month, the President, in his references to the subject of international bimetalism, spoke earnestly and anxiously of his desire to see an international bimetallic agreement consummated. His assurances gave renewed hope to bimetalists all over the country, and seemed final and conclusive answer to those who had claimed that the President was not in earnest in his efforts toward international bimetalism. For myself, I needed no such proof. I had again and again been made to know how genuine was the President's devotion to this settlement of the vexed question. Within a fortnight after this, with no event meanwhile which would change existing conditions, the Secretary of the Treasury, in support of a bill which he has prepared respecting the currency, said as follows to a committee of Congress:

"The objects I have in mind in the series of provisions offered by me are four in number:

"1. To commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, remove, so far as possible, all doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the credit of the United States both at home and abroad."

The two statements are utterly at variance and contradictory to each other. They can not be reconciled. This is not the proper occasion to analyze the bill of the Secretary. It will reach limbo long before it reaches the Senate. He proposes to capitalize the premium on our bonds sold recently and to make them, with others to be issued, security definitely payable in gold.

The Secretary forgets that only a few months ago, when the country was in dire distress, we were compelled to pay $3,000,000 for the privilege of keeping the word "gold" out of some of these very bonds. He ought not to forget, for the bank of which he was president, it was said, got some of the bonds and received some of the proceeds of that deplorable transaction. But I do not intend to discuss the bill which the President's message specifically does not indorse, and it is premature to criticize the Secretary's Republicanism, for his advent into the party and the Cabinet were practically contemporaneous. We must accept the situation.

In my opinion, the great majority of the members of the Republican party are bimetalists, and the fact that they are misrepresented by a Cabinet officer is not pleasing, but it is endurable. The selection of the members of his official household is the President's own affair, and so long as he stands upon the question of bimetalism where he has ever stood, there is no serious ground for apprehension. But even in the inconceivable event that the Chief Magistrate of this people should, in the exercise of his judgment, determine to countenance the final fastening upon this country of the burdens of the gold standard, I trust we may still warrant for faith and hope in the pledges of the party and the wisdom of its counsels.

We will cross our bridges when we come to them. The time when this country will submit to the final imposition of gold monometallism is far away. Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the ability of this country to maintain alone the parity between silver and gold, there is no question that the concurrence of other nations would help and not hinder the cause of bimetalism in the United States, and efforts to secure it ought to receive the cordial support of every citizen who is opposed to gold monometallism.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not a fact that during the extra session of the Fifty-fifth Congress the President sent in a message here on the currency question, calling for the creation of a home monetary commission to more firmly fix the gold standard on this country, and at the same time Senator WOLCOTT was at work with the International Monetary Commission in Europe working for international bimetalism?

Mr. MADDOX. In Indianapolis?

Mr. GAINES. He wanted a commission to work in the United States to continue the gold standard, while at the same time the Wolcott commission was in Europe working for bimetalism or the double standard.

Mr. MADDOX. The fact is, and it can be proven, that when this commission was in Europe attempting to bring about bimetalism in accordance with the pledge of the Republican party to the people by which that Administration holds its possession to-day, that commission was being undermined by the Cabinet officers of this country and by other parties belonging to that party, and it is true, as the gentlemen from Tennessee suggest, that he did send such a message to Congress. And here, when you rise in this House, if you should, I undertake to say that gentlemen will claim that they attempted to bring about bimetalism, but I confront you with these facts. This gentleman who was on the commission says that bimetalism is not dead. I commend the reading of his speech to every one of you. He gives you the reason he failed, in no uncertain tones, and the present Administration is directly responsible for its failure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the committee to a couple of extracts of what is purported to have emanated from Mr. Lincoln. I have read them often:

If a government contracted a debt with a certain amount of money in circulation, and then contracted the money volume before the debt was paid, it is the most heinous crime that a government could commit against the people.

Now, gentlemen, if I am right in my theories in regard to this matter, when this five hundred millions, or nearly so, of silver is practically confiscated and sent into the junk shop, when the national bank currency is withdrawn, the greenbacks and Treasury notes impounded, according to what Mr. Lincoln says, there can be nothing that is more heinous for a government to do than to break the contract in this way and under these circumstances.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I will ask the gentleman if he refers to any message or authenticated paper of Mr. Lincoln?

Mr. MADDOX. It is a newspaper extract. I have seen it often before.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does not make any difference; it is true, Mr. MADDOX. As my colleague states, it does not make any difference who said it; it is true, all the same.

Now, Mr. Lincoln said something else. That is, he is reputed to have said:

I see in the near future a crisis arising which unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this time more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in times of war. God grant that my suspicion may prove groundless.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That quotation has been floating for a good many years, and was submitted to the biographers of Mr. Lincoln, who have control of his papers, and they have more than once publicly stated that it does not appear in Mr. Lincoln's papers and that it is not in his style; so that their idea is that Mr. Lincoln is free from the charge that he gave expression to such a sentiment.

Mr. MADDOX. He may not have said it, but it was a statement that would have done him or any other man credit, and the prophecy has been fulfilled. Nor could there be presented anything more conclusive as to the results of the power of these corporations than this bill demonstrates here to-day.

Mr. TERRY. You might say that it was never denied to be the utterance of Lincoln until lately.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have analyzed this bill correctly, I think it is this in the concrete.

This bill is a scheme to legalize the authority that has been asserted by the Treasurer of the United States in attempting to put this country on a gold basis without the authority of law.

This bill is a scheme to take from the people one-half of its money of final redemption and confiscate the same.

This is a bill to change and alter the contracts of the people without their consent, for making their obligations which have heretofore, since the organization of the Government, been payable in coin, both gold and silver, payable in gold only.

This bill is a scheme to contract the currency at the will of the bankers.

This bill is a scheme to adopt the gold standard for the benefit of the banks, without making themselves liable in any way to furnish the gold to sustain it. This bill is a scheme for the advantage of about 300,000 people holding stock in national banks to the disadvantage of the rest of the people in the United States.

This bill, in my judgment, is a scheme by which and through which will be operated the most gigantic trust that ever cursed any nation or country.

I want to say now that this bill, as proposed, has been considered in financial circles, but has not been asked for by the great body of the people of this country. They have not been consulted about it. Thousands and thousands of people throughout the land who are to be the most affected by it know nothing of it; they have not been consulted in regard to it. In every State and county throughout the Republic there reside the great toiling millions who have to bear the burdens of this Government. They have no newspapers, no lobbies, no organizations, no associations to defend their interest. They are looking to-day to the patriotism, to the honor and integrity of the Representatives of this House to take care of their interest. I trust that they will not look in vain to the Representatives of the great party to which I belong. Let every Democrat vote no, thereby putting the seal of his condemnation on the most dangerous and baneful measure that has found its way into Congress in a half century. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, for the first time since I have been a member of this House I have not only been invited to speak, but urged to do so by those who are responsible for the steady flow of conversation on this side of the Chamber [laughter], and while that is a new sensation, I will admit that it is not an altogether disagreeable one, though, to tell the truth about it, I have not that appetite for discussing the silver question that I once had. I fear that we all share in that strange decline of interest which is observable throughout the country whenever men come together for the purpose of talk and controversy. I remember a time when if a man was seen upon a street corner in an attitude of debate, he would be surrounded within a few minutes by the whole voting population of the neighborhood and could be sure of an audience whether he hired a hall or not. But to-day if a man should be seen in that attitude upon the same corner, it would tend to greatly reduce the population of the town. [Laughter.]

This is not because these questions are less important than they were, but because the substance of them has taken final shape in the opinion of all the people. Complaint is made to-day that enough time has not been allowed to enable our Democratic friends to prepare for this debate. I have always had a suspicion that my friends on the Democratic side were never adequately prepared to discuss the gold and silver question, but never expected to hear from such distinguished sources as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] on last Friday and my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] to-day the candid admission that after years of speechmaking even the select men of the Democratic party feel that they require an additional period of incubation before they are ready to tackle the question in the Congress of the United States. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, I do not pretend to be as well able to speak on the question as I used to be. There was a time when I carried in my head, or in my satchel, about all the figures that had any real application to the question; and one of the embarrassments of my unexpected participation in the debate to-day arises from the fact that I have left my figures at home and my documentary evidence at my boarding house. But after all, that does not trouble me as much as it might, because I guess the debate has reached a stage where a person has to choose between letting go of the statistics or losing his audience. [Laughter.] To-day nearly everybody feels a sufficient authority on this subject within himself to dispense with extracts either from old speeches or standard textbooks. One of the results of the national education through which we have passed was that everybody began to feel that he could make a speech on this subject himself, a frame of mind absolutely fatal to the authority of other people's speeches. But there is a more complete reason why the Democratic party does not feel as well able to discuss the silver question now as it was in that memorable year when the Federal Union was resolved into a general debating society.

Mr. Chairman, things have changed in the United States since the date of that great discussion. I hold in my hand a volume called The First Battle [laughter and applause], a volume which was printed about three years ago and sold by subscription for $3.50. It sold well, I am informed, considering that neither the covers nor the contents were worth anything, netting to the author in the neighborhood of $40,000. The volume seems to have been retired from circulation without any particular clamor for a reissue, for I had the greatest possible difficulty in securing a copy, finally being able to track one to a second-hand bookstore, where, without much negotiation, I corralled it for 25 cents. [Laughter.] That decline in the price of The First Battle is only an approximate measure of the decline in public interest and public confidence in the hearsays and flights of the imagination there collected together. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I notice, Mr. Chairman, in reading this book, that a good many speeches that were actually made were left out, and only those preserved which deal with the more solid and enduring features of the doctrine the author was engaged in propagating. Most of the speeches had even then grown inconsequential and unavailable for the holiday trade that followed the election of 1896, and I shall only pick out a few which deal with the author's philosophy at its most important points. For example, I find here a speech, made in the little city of Newton, in Iowa, near the beginning of his first journey into the enemy's country. Supposing the town had been named after Sir Isaac, he thought a few remarks on the subject of gravitation would be in order. Thereupon he said:

Some of the laws of finance—I may say all the great laws of finance—are as certain in their operation and as irresistible in their force as the law of gravitation. If you throw a stone into the air you know that it will come down. Why? Because it is drawn toward the center of the earth. The law upon which we base our fight is as sure as the law of gravitation. If we have a gold standard, prices are as certain to fall as the stone which we throw into the air.

[Laughter.]

I expect that this solemn declaration of immutable principles would be received more seriously here if there were not so many persons present who recollect the author's first address on this subject on this floor in 1893. At that time he was devoting his energies to a Democratic scheme for reducing the price of everything by free trade with those countries which produce things cheaper than we do. And when he was confronted by the fact that the protective tariff had operated to secure the same beneficial results by the universal employment of our own people, he declared that things were not yet cheap enough, but that everybody was being robbed by the extortions of the protective tariff; and in so far as he admitted that the products of labor had declined in price he said:

You must attribute it to the inventive genius that has multiplied, a thousand times in many instances, the strength of a single arm and enables us to do with one man what fifty could not do fifty years ago. That is what has brought down prices in this country and every where.—Congressional Record, March 16, 1892.

In less than four years this versatile young man, the national success of his party having in the meantime still further reduced prices by putting American industries into the soup house, turned about and proposed to help the case by doubling the price of every article of man's use and necessity in the United States. It would have been a strange satire on human credulity if the Democratic party had been able to win the election of 1892 by offering their services to bring prices down and then to win the election of 1896 by throwing Mr. Cleveland overboard and starting out on a new scheme with the object of putting prices up. When we come to look back at it, it was evidently too much to expect that the same community could be swindled twice by the same fellows within the space of four years. I therefore askeverybody to keep in mind for a few minutes this heartfelt tribute to Sir Isaac Newton to which I have referred.

I find here also a speech delivered in Minneapolis to a congregation of good women, and I am glad that Mr. Bryan had the courtesy to recognize the influence and interest of the women of the United States in politics. My own conviction is that the Republican party owes them a good deal more than the Populistic movement does, because a woman's mind is less likely to be dazzled by brilliant conclusions than a man's is. I have often said that the Republican party won in the great debate because at the American fireside, where the discussion was carried on in dead earnest, there was a debater who searched the mysteries of the question without being disturbed very much by the explosions of red fire and campaign spectacles. She demanded to know what the effect was to be on the household treasury of creating a new coin called a dollar out of material valued nowhere in the world at more than 50 cents.

Gentlemen on the other side say that the Republican party bought and intimidated the working people of the United States; that they were corrupted and coerced into voting the Republican ticket. They are mistaken. They were won over by a little woman at home, who counseled them to keep clear of a proposition which proposed to double the price of everything, at least until they had made written agreements to double their own wages and salaries; so that I think that Mr. Bryan was not only chivalrous but wise when he addressed to the women of Minneapolis by far the best speech he made during the campaign. Among other things he told these women:

The gold standard means dearer money; dearer money means cheaper property; cheaper property means harder times; harder times means more people out of work; more people out of work means more people destitute; more people destitute means more people desperate; more people desperate means more crime.

You see that in this hasty sketch he carried the women of Minneapolis by easy stages from the crime of '73 to the universal reign of crime incident to a continuance of the gold standard in the United States. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The election returns of that town indicate that Mr. Bryan did not make a very deep impression upon the women of Minneapolis by this speech; they did not think very much of it, although I have no doubt they enjoyed the peach-ripening smiles that went with it. And it would be an interesting thing for Mr. Bryan to go back to Minneapolis and get that splendid congregation of women together once more, if only for the satisfaction of knowing what they think of him by this time.

Now, I can readily perceive how a man who has his system encumbered with a philosophy like that would naturally call for time if suddenly required now to express his views with reference to the gold standard as opposed to the free coinage of silver in the United States. I would be glad if you folks could have more time. My sympathies go out to my friends on the other side on account of the short shift allowed them for readjusting back-number ideas to the present-day condition of affairs. Yet, on the other hand, we have got to save a little sympathy for ourselves, and on the whole we will agree that while the matter is somewhat sudden in this House there is no particular suddenness so far as the country is concerned.

In every Congressional district the people have been discussing this matter with more or less diligence for a space of some years. There is not a line in this bill that has not been at least twice recommended by the President of the United States, and not a single thing in it that has not been at various times reported by committees of this House. What we do, therefore, we do in the light of day, each man acting for the people whose commission he bears.

Yet I find in the New York Herald of yesterday an interview with one ex-Governor Altgeld, of Chicago, and I name him because he is a type of the unscrupulous clamor that follows every debate on the money question in the United States. He says:

The policies of the Republican party have been determined by syndicates, and the men at Washington have simply carried out instructions. It is hard to conceive a more pitiable or contemptible sight than that of the Republican Representatives simply obeying orders.

I will say to ex-Governor Altgeld and to the disintegrating group of charlatans for which he speaks that the Republican party is here obeying orders. I am here obeying the orders of a vast majority of the people of the Tenth Congressional district of Iowa.

I come here as an humble Representative in this Chamber to enter the judgment of my constituents and to do what I can to put the laws of this country into harmony with their opinion. [Applause.]

This bill has had to bear the weight of no little criticism. There was a good deal of noise made about the ears of the last Congress because they did not then take action in the matter of currency legislation. Mass meetings were held all over the West, urging and even threatening representatives in Congress in connection with this matter. No account was taken of the fact that the Senate had not yet been delivered from the control of Populism, and this House was urged to spend its time in splashing in the water, without the reasonable expectation of seeing currency legislation carried beyond a vote in this Chamber. This precipitancy arose from the fact that a considerable number of men in the House and out of it, after great meditation, had perfected a certain system of finance in their own minds, and little toleration was extended by these to the difficulties which naturally grew up in respect to the passage of such legislation. There is an infirmity in the human mind which tends to consider knowledge as a monopoly, existing in the minds of experts, under a sort of copyright, and there seems to be something about the pursuit of the science of money especially which enables everybody to appreciate his own ideas without treating very hospitably the ideas of anybody else. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

To a man, therefore, bearing the burden of exclusive information like that even the rational delay arising from the fact that nothing could be finally done appeared like a reckless waste of time. There were criticisms also, though, I am bound to say, not in any spirit of hostility to this measure, because it does not present a more academic scheme of finance. I confess that I share in neither of these complaints. There was no sense in sending a bill like this to perish at the hands of an unfriendly Senate, and so far as the size of this measure is concerned it seems to me to be big enough for practical purposes. It covers all the ground upon which the verdict of the people has been taken; and while it is not an elaborate code of monetary reform, like some that were manufactured for us by accommodating gentlemen on the outside, and like others matured by studious and able men among our own number, it is none the less respectable on that account. While it is a little bill, it deals with great things, and in such a way that nobody is bewildered and nobody lost in the woods, except our brethren on the other side, who are now vainly trying to recall distant echoes of campaign cries that have grown ludicrous in the light of experience.

Venturing to speak only for myself, I think this bill comes to us at about the right time and about the right size, and I only wish that we might be able to present it as a Christmas gift to the business world of America. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The central and dominant purpose of the measure is to define the standard of value, to make known by law, without quibble, uncertainty, or evasion, exactly what the dollar of the United States is, what the word means, what is to be understood when the name of the standard coin is spoken. We propose to give to the American dollar a significance so free from doubt and ambiguity that the meaning of it shall be fixed and unquestionable throughout the commercial world. But it will be observed that in defining without equivocation the standard of value this bill does not ignore the historical fact that we have long been and now are on the gold standard.

A MEMBER. If we are now on the gold standard, what is the necessity of this bill?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Well, the necessity for this bill arises from the fact that, notwithstanding we are on the gold standard and have been for more than two generations, there are some of the boys on your side that have not heard of it yet. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

As a matter of fact, we are on the gold standard and have been for practical purposes since 1834. The law of that year, by treating 16 ounces of silver as equivalent to 1 ounce of gold, effectually excluded the coinage of silver dollars, because the material was worth more in the market than the nominal value of the coin. Therefore nobody presented the silver for coinage, and even fractional currency gradually disappeared from circulation and use. The country could not even keep a 10-cent piece in circulation until the act of 1853 had debased fractional coins and authorized their manufacture in limited quantities out of material bought on Government account.

There can be no question that the act of 1853 was intended to do away with the inconvenience of attempting to maintain two standards of value. Mr. Dunham, of Indiana, who was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in a speech which will be found in the Appendix to the Congressional Globe, volume 6, page 190, said distinctly on this floor:

We intend to do what the best writers on political economy have approved, what experience, where the experiment has been tried, has demonstrated to be the best, and what the committee believe to be necessary and proper—to make but one standard of currency and to make all others subservient to it. We mean to make the gold the standard coin and to make those new silver coins applicable and convenient, not for large but for small transactions.

These matters have been discussed in various forms in books and in pamphlets in recent years, but the clearest and most satisfactory discussion of them which has come under my notice will be found in a recent work published by the Putnams on The History of American Coinage, by our old colleague, affectionately remembered in this House, D. K. Watson, of Ohio, now a member of the commission to revise and codify the laws of the United States. For painstaking research and impartial historical accuracy this book is a most admirable treatise on this subject, worthy of a place in the library of every student. Nor can there be any sound dissent from Mr. Watson's conclusion that the effect of the passage of the act of 1853—

Was just what the leading members of Congress said it would be when it was being discussed in the House of Representatives. It effectually put the country on the gold basis, thus supplementing the effect of the act of 1834—History of the American Coinage, page 131, second edition; Putnam's Sons, 1890.

I repeat, therefore, that for practical purposes we have been on the gold basis for more than two generations. If we were not put there by the act of 1834, the act of 1853 completed it; and if there was any doubt about it after 1853, it was finally resolved in 1873, although it took the Democratic party some time to find out what was done at that time, and nearly twenty-five years to get really excited on the subject. [Laughter on the Republican side.] You need not be distressed; I am not going to defend myself or anybody else against the crime of 1873. I have made myself reasonably familiar with the literature of that subject, even going to the extent of reading the speeches which repose in the peaceful tomb of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am going to be absolutely frank here, and I do not want anybody on the other side to draw a "quotation" on me [laughter], whether it is what I may have said or what somebody else has said. [Renewed laughter.]

Of course, if anybody intends to do that, there is probably no way for me to prevent it, but I want you to understand in advance that I am not to be embarrassed by anybody's speeches or votes in the years that have intervened since the "crime." [Laughter.] I would like to agree with others, and I have a pardonable ambition to agree with myself, but for the purpose of disposing of this business I do not intend to be constrained by what this man or that man said or did twenty years ago, and I do not propose to be bound by what I said and did myself.

Mr. COX. You admit that you were wrong all the time?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will let others explain their own mistakes. I have not been here long enough to make all the mistakes possible to be made about silver. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. You have made a good many.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I confess only one. I confess that I shared in the general stupidity in respect to the law of 1890, which required the daily purchase of 6 tons of pig silver to be paid for with promissory notes. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. And the trouble is that you have not got through with it yet.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Hardly a session of Congress has passed since 1890 that some enterprising member has not risen on this floor and read out loud a paragraph from the speech I made here, or rather printed in the RECORD without making it, in 1890, on the silver legislation of that year. It has been used to show that I was at that time in favor of the "free and unlimited." In point of fact, in 1890 I had my first opportunity to put in a vote against 16 to 1, and I have always had some satisfaction in the fact that there never has been a session of Congress from that time until now that I did not have at least one such opportunity. [Laughter.] So that there is one thing I ought not to be accused of, and that is that I have ever supported a proposition to manufacture our dollars of material worth less than a dollar, for the benefit of the gentlemen who owned the material, and that is some satisfaction. [Applause.]

But in 1890 I voted for the act which I now regard as of unquestionably bad policy, the act for the purchase of the silver bullion to be piled up in the Treasury of the United States. I did it because Senator TELLER of Colorado and Senator Sherman of Ohio both agreed in thinking that the purchase of the entire American product would restore the parity between gold and silver. I thought that when 16 to 1 became thus the actual ratio between gold and silver free coinage would be easy and unobjectionable, and my troubles have arisen from the fact that before I got through I ventured the prediction that during Harrison's Administration that state of affairs would come to pass and the free coinage of silver be entered upon without inconvenience, difficulty, or danger. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. You say that you voted for that law, and that when you voted for it you made a speech?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I voted for it and slipped a speech on the subject into the RECORD before I went home.

Mr. COX. And you were wrong about that?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Well, I am trying to apologize for it, Colonel. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. I am trying to get you out of the hole which you put your party in. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. We have been trying ever since to get out, though I hardly think we have profited very much by your assistance. When we came in 1893 to repeal that law I confess that I was in the greatest perplexity of mind. The country was in the midst of an unexampled panic, and while I have always believed that Mr. Cleveland grossly overstated the responsibility of that law for the untoward events which followed his election, at the same time there can be no doubt that the policy of piling up silver in the Treasury, purchased by the issue of promissory notes payable on demand, contributed materially to the distrust and confusion of the business community. In such an emergency, as so often happens under our system of government, party lines were forgotten and the Republican party upon the call of a Democratic President had the courage to undo the blunder of 1890. When I came down here to the extra session I had an idea that maybe I was the only person entirely at sea on the questions that brought the Congress together.

I remember that one day as I was passing the house of Senator Sherman, then as now everywhere regarded as one of the wisest and safest authorities upon financial matters, and saw him sitting out in front of his home, like Abraham before his tent. I went in and talked with him about my anxieties and fears, and I shall never forget the simplicity and kindness with which he spoke to me—that simplicity which characterizes all great minds. He said that "if I were in your place I would not worry about these questions. Twenty years ago I thought I knew a good deal about the silver question, but every prediction I have ever made on the subject in our efforts to restore the value of silver bullion has turned out exactly opposite to what I expected."

Mr. COX. That is the way it is going to do again. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. So that when I listened to my friend from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], making predictions on this subject, I made up my mind that if he had been troubled in the past by the predictions of other years, as many on this side of the House have been, he would have been more economical with his prophecies about the future. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Senator Sherman was of the opinion that if we bought all the silver produced in the United States as fast as it was produced we would restore the ratio. But Congress forgot at least one element which enters into the law of commercial demand, and that was that the purchase of silver bullion to be piled up in the Treasury is not such a consumption of it as would materially affect the price. We know more on this subject than we did even ten years ago. To-day there are few competent students in any country who believe that the act of one nation putting a stamp on an ingot of silver is providing such a consumption of it in an economic sense as would materially affect the ratio of its value compared to gold.

I have concluded, being guided by what has happened to us, that the law of 1873, in omitting the silver dollar of a former generation from our list of authorized coins, was an act of farsighted wisdom, worthy of the Administration of General Grant. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have seen hard-pressed politicians drag General Grant from his grave for the purpose of holding him up for public contempt as one who did not know what his own Administration was doing and what laws his own right hand was signing. Others, more bold and more infamous still, have not hesitated to say that he deliberately sold out in secret the interests of his country for the sake of the moneyed class in the United States. If there was ever any force in these accusations they are decayed and lifeless now, for the American people, cherishing that stainless name in their hearts, will go no further to justify the act of 1873 than to recollect the immortal signature, "Approved, Feb. 12, 1873. U. S. Grant." [Applause on the Republican side.]

If the act of 1873 had remained undisturbed by subsequent silver legislation, all or nearly all of our monetary problems would have been simplified, if not avoided altogether. I say that notwithstanding the party in which I have served all my life is responsible for all that has ever been done for silver. I do not accuse our friends of the Democratic party of ever having helped silver at all. During the whole of Mr. Cleveland's first Administration you never even offered a bill on this subject in this House, though you had a majority here and though the slender Republican majority in the Senate was made up from the silver States.

And the last time you elected Mr. Cleveland President of the United States I charge that you elected him well knowing that he was the most hostile factor in the politics of the country against the free coinage of silver. He was not nominated by the money power of New York. Either the money power of New York had no influence or else they used it to send delegates malignant in their antipathy to Mr. Cleveland, because in his nomination what you have described as the money power of the East was overruled by the South and the West, and thus Mr. Cleveland was a second time made leader of the Democratic party. You think you did a bad thing for yourselves, but I tell you that you unintentionally did a first-rate thing for the American people. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

It may be said, therefore, that the silver question was never seriously taken up in the United States until 1896. You on that side never allowed your dim and nebulous convictions on the subject to interfere with your electing its chief enemy President, and we on our side never hesitated to write our platform for the entertainment of our Rocky Mountain friends. But in 1896 the American people brushed politics aside and sat down in solemn earnest to settle an issue that had been the plaything of the politics of the American people for a quarter of a century. The argument for free coinage was not new. For fifteen years it had reposed peacefully on a mass of statistics and a scrapbook of garbled extracts and worthless political speeches. In the first months of the campaign all these were brought to the front—what Mr. Carlisle said; what Mr. Blaine said; how Mr. CANNON voted; how Mr. McKinley voted—but the American people insisted on going to the root of the question.

The campaign opened with a blare of trumpets and in the Mississippi Valley it looked as if everything was going Democratic, so much so that politicians who had failed in the business in the Republican fold got quickly into the silver camp, declaring with genuine exhilaration that 16 to 1 was sweeping the country like a prairie fire. These are the people that are entitled to our sympathy to-day as they gather together in disconsolate committee meetings to talk with one another about old times and to enjoy the meager remnants of a political importance that has long since disappeared. [Laughter.]

In July, 1896, the people of the United States began to argue the silver question on the stump, at their firesides, in great political assemblies, and when they were through, my humble opinion is that the debate for practical purposes was over. If the State of Iowa, where we are nearly all farmers, had voted one way, and the State of Massachusetts, where they are nearly all engaged in mercantile and industrial pursuits, had voted the other, there might be some doubt about it, although I would stand by the judgment of the 80,000 majority of farmers in Iowa. But when a proposition gets a black eye at the same election in the State of Iowa and in the State of Massachusetts by about the same majority, I tell you that there is no future for that proposition in an intellectual life of the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I desire to call your attention to two reasons which sent the silver agitation to the wall before that campaign was half over. In the first place the questions that arose were questions of fact, and the campaign had not gone on four weeks before the American people found out that the facts you folks were relying upon were in the nature of fakes and humbugs. For instance, Mr. Bryan, in the address, to which I have alluded, to the women of Minneapolis, illustrated the effect of the demonetization of silver in 1873 by comparing it to the destruction of one of two piles of wheat of equal size, and declared that the destruction of one-half of the metal money of the country had naturally doubled the value of the other half, thereby cutting into the value of all other property; had sent the value of property down by sending money up.

That was the argument, and the only objection to the conclusions that came from it was that it was not true, and the more people examined into it the less they believed it to be true. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. What argument did you make for silver?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have not had, Mr. Chairman, to ask forgiveness for making any. [Laughter and applause.] In the first place, the silver dollar from the foundation of our mint had never entered into the volume of the currency of the country, the total aggregate coinage hardly exceeding $8,000,000, so that it was literally true that the law of 1873 had never taken from the American people any use of silver which they had at the time enjoyed. There was of course some force in the proposition that the legislation of commercial Europe might have injuriously affected the value of silver, but nobody in his senses could make out how you could correct by the legislation of a country which had not used silver the hostile policy by those countries which actually had used it.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. With your present lights and information before you, are you now in favor of opening the doors of the mints to the free coinage of silver by international agreement?

Mr. DOLLIVER. No, sir; I am not. I have joined in the last experiment with silver, on an international basis or otherwise. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have been humbugged as long as I calculate to be, if I know it. There is certainly no pressure for international agreement now such as might have reasonably existed five years ago, because if the Director of the Mint is correct the world's supply of gold has grown with such an amazing annual increment that before the end of the next year it will more than equal the total aggregate of gold and silver put together when the St. Louis platform was adopted; so that I think that those who believed in international bimetallism will find small necessity for the further agitation of that subject, while those who only acquiesced in the efforts of our Government to promote the international agreement no longer feel the slightest pressure of duty in that regard.

Another thing the American people wanted to know was what was to be the result to them if they should indulge in this scheme of free coinage, and there was in public life no man who even pretended to be able to predict the result of the policy. Nobody could tell what the value of the free-coinage dollar would be. Mr. Bryan himself first said one thing and then another. In New York when he accepted the nomination he said, as the frost of that occasion was settling upon him, that the result would be to produce a coin exactly equal to the gold dollar; but long before he got back to the West he was denouncing the gold dollar as a two-hundred-cent affair and declaring that the rights of the poor man could only be protected by cutting its inflated value in two; so that the historian will never know exactly what Mr. Bryan's views of the question were. He was candid enough, however, to admit that he did not pretend to be dealing with an exact science; that he did not know what the effect would be of beginning the free coinage of silver; that it was an experiment and he was willing to try it. He was traveling without baggage at the time [laughter] and was ready to try it.

Governor Boies, of Iowa, did not hesitate to write, in response to a question propounded by the New York World, that it was impossible to predict what the effect would be of giving free coinage of silver; and Senator VEST, a wiser man than both, on the floor of the Senate solemnly stated that the human mind had not the faculties which enabled it to foretell what the effect of this policy would be.

The American people were in a situation better calculated to invite experiments than they are likely again soon to be. Their business was at a standstill; their property was shrunken in value; their debts were pressing upon them; the hands of labor were everywhere idle, and the products of labor lay in a dead market place, diminished in value almost beyond human belief.

With such surroundings the special car made its pilgrimage throughout the United States, and it is not surprising that so many troubled hearts made a favorable response to the eager rhapsodies which had done business beyond the Missouri for so many years. It will be written in our history, in vindication of our institutions and as an everlasting witness for popular government, that the American people, standing in the midst of their prostrate fortunes, weary and heavy laden under burdens too heavy to be borne, deliberately chose, trampling under foot the temptations of the hour, to bear the ills they had, rather than fly to others which they knew not of. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have heard boast made of the number who followed the free-silver banner. I have always wondered that there were not more. I recollect an earnest conversation I had once in this Chamber with Judge Boatner, of Louisiana, a sincere and patriotic man. We agreed that the proposed policy might produce unexpected misfortunes, and I did not in the least lose my respect for him when he said that he was going with his party because nothing could happen to his people worse than had already come upon them. It is not surprising that communities which in literal despair of their business surroundings looked hither and thither in hope of relief should give a friendly ear to those who were offering them a distinct remedy for their evils.

The success of the patent-medicine industry of the United States is an interesting testimony that such infirmities of human nature are prevalent in the world. You on your side had a distinct advantage over us. You knew exactly what you were going to do; and curiously enough in this world a man has a great advantage over everyone else when he has an exact remedy at hand. We on our part had to indulge in arguments, in expressions of hope, in appeals to experience.

Mr. Bryan, for instance, found the farmers of the West selling corn for 10 cents a bushel, and he came to them and said, "Now, that is too low a price for corn," and every farmer in the United States said, "That is right;" and I say that that was so; and the place I parted company with Mr. Bryan was as to the remedy for that state of things. He said the way to increase the price of corn was to cut in two the value of the dollar. He said the reason that corn was 10 cents a bushel was because the dollar was a 200-cent dollar, and he went to our debt-burdened people and proposed deliberately to double the price of the products of the farm by cutting in two the value of the standard coin of the realm.

The American people studied that proposition carefully, and the more they studied it the less they liked it; and while they were engaged in the study of it they heard a voice from a little vine-covered portico of a cottage yonder in Canton, Ohio, saying:

Open the mills of the United States; give the American people something to do for a living; give their old employments back and their old wages, and you will create a market that will very speedily restore the price of farm products and of all other products of labor in the United States.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I will appeal to the experience of every man whether that philosophy of our affairs has not turned out to be the true philosophy. Mr. Bryan said that we did not have money enough in circulation, and he may have been right about that; for the fact was, we did not have very much money in circulation at the time he was performing his most famous acts in the field of oratory and eloquence. Everybody that had any money held onto it; everybody that had any money in the banks went and got it; everybody that sold goods for cash took the money home; so that the channels of trade were without circulation and the money of the American people was hidden away in the private hoards of a panic-stricken community.

I appeal to every business man's experience whether the decisive vote of the American people adverse to Mr. Bryan's candidacy did not immediately unlock the hoarded money of the United States. In every bank the very next morning after that election you could tell that something had happened. There was a queer smell in the bank—a smell somewhat like the odor of the old north room in a New England homestead, peculiar but not disagreeable [laughter]—a smell of hoarded gold brought from its hiding place and laid down again on the bank counter to reopen an account.

That vote of the American people did more. It put the loanable funds of the whole world at the disposal of the business of this country, so that money flowed from all quarters for investment in the United States. As a result, we have not only seen the money which we had put back into circulation, but in the last three years the aggregate volume of money in the United States has increased by leaps and bounds. You will admit that by the free coinage of silver about all you could have done for us would have been to manufacture silver dollars as fast as you could. Even supposing that the unlimited issue of a coin inferior in value to the corresponding coin of gold would not have instantly taken away from us what money we had in gold, depreciating our whole money supply to the silver standard, all you proposed to do for us was to open the mints and begin the manufacture of silver dollars.

You thought that would increase the money supply. We believed that its immediate and fatal effect would have been to drive away our whole volume of gold coinage; but even if we were wrong as to that and your policy did not affect the circulation of gold, still your policy would have been a poor recourse, under the circumstances, compared with ours. The Director of the Mint tells me that if all the mints in the United States worked all the time, night and day, and did nothing else, they could manufacture only 50,000,000 silver dollars in a year. The Secretary of the Treasury tells me that since William McKinley was inaugurated there has been added to the volume of money in the United States the stupendous aggregate sum of $400,000,000, most of it in gold and all of it as good as gold. Now let me make that a little clearer. If you had worked all the mints all the time you could have manufactured out of silver only $150,000,000 since William McKinley was inaugurated; but our policy has given to the business of the American people $400,000,000 in less than three years, an amount which would have taken all the mints of the United States, working all the time, eight years to manufacture out of silver.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. And every dollar is worth a hundred cents.

Mr. DOLLIVER. My friend says that every dollar is worth a hundred cents. That is the best thing about it. Every man who gets a dollar by the labor of his hands or the sale of his products knows that that dollar is as good as gold everywhere in the world. In other words, brethren, we have done for you at least four times as much as you expected to be able to do for yourselves; and now why would it not be a good idea for you to get out of the main traveled road and let the procession move on? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

In 1896 Mr. Bryan said in a score of speeches, preserved in this curious volume, that if the gold standard was fastened upon this country, the price of everything would go down and keep going down under a law as inexorable as the law of gravitation.

Do you think we have reached the end of the gold standard?—

He cried, addressing the people of Baltimore September 19—There is no end. Do you think that we have drained the cup of sorrow to its dregs? No, my friends, you can not set a limit to financial depression and hard times.

Is there a man on this floor to-day, regardless of his politics, who will stand up here and say publicly that in making these statements Mr. Bryan knew what he was talking about? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] If there is, I would like to have him stand up. [After a pause.] I now call the attention of the country to the fact that the Democratic party in this House has become so bewildered by the industrial and commercial activity which surrounds us that not one of his followers will stand up here and say that on a question which goes to the heart of this controversy Mr. Bryan had sufficient wisdom to guide the footsteps of those less enlightened than himself. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He said wages would come down and the working people of the United States be left without employment. Was he right about that? When he spoke there were a good many in this country in that condition, and my heart always went out in sympathy to these industrious millions and their helpless families.

I expect we had as much sympathy as you folks had, even though we did not coincide with your scheme for restoring wages and happiness. Let us all rejoice that after less than three years of Republican Administration there is not an industrious man out of employment—not one in the United States. Not only are the great centers of industry and commerce busy, but a revival has taken place even in the remote villages and rural districts.

It may interest you to know that since the last session of this House I have become a farmer. [Laughter.] Last summer when I wanted to build a barn I walked all over a town of 12,000 people trying to get somebody to put a foundation under it, and I declare to you that I had finally to put it in myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARHAM. Is the barn still standing?

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is, and in every respect a good job. If you have kept your eye on the newspapers, you have noticed that the wages of labor are everywhere steadily going up, adding millions of dollars to the comfort of the humble homes of the land; so that when Mr. Bryan predicted a still further loss of employment and a still further decline in wages the whole world now knows that he was wrong and not right. I do not think any the less of him personally because his speeches have not come out true. When a man tells me that it is going to rain and it turns out to be a sunshiny day, I do not have any less respect for his moral character. [Laughter.] But where a man predicts dry weather and plentiful showers fall instead, I insist that unless he expects to hear a personal application of the proverb by which the mental outfit of such a one is described, he should at least get in out of the rain. [Laughter.]

Mr. Bryan in 1896 claimed that the restoration of prosperity in the United States was entirely impossible except under his general management, and I here publicly convict him, by the open book of universal experience, of wholesale and retail dealing in misfortunes that never come. He told the multitudes, which had a right to look to him for wisdom and guidance, that the design of the friends of the gold standard was to put it in the power of a few bankers to corner the money of the world.

Talk about monopolies, talk about trusts—

He said, speaking in this city on the centennial of Washington's Farewell Address—my friends, they propose to establish the most gigantic trust of all—a money trust—and let a few men who hold it all deal it out at such price as they will to all the others of the 70,000,000 American people.

You will see that his idea was even cruder than that just uttered by my friend from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], that those interested in banking and other business enterprises of the country are conspiring together for the purpose of disturbing the national prosperity—of wiping out the very thing which makes any kind of business either profitable or possible.
